used in supplying the various noises in the manufacture of the animated pictures, and believe it or not, "Pinto" still is quite the musician and it is his "yellow clarinet" that makes cow moos, a derby hat that makes a roar like an airplane besides many other clever uses of soundmakers.

Colvig is no novice at entertaining. He has appeared over coast, national and international radio hookups many times. He is also author of the lyrics in the song, "The World Owe Me a Livin'" which the grasshopper sang in the Disney Silly Symphony "The Grasshopper and the Ant." Likewise, it was Pinto's voice which was heard as the grasshopper in the cartoon. His act will consist of explaining how sound effects are put into cartoons, and with a running patter of wisecracks and gags, illustrates by doing some of the effects.

On the screen will be "Here Comes the Navy" with James Cagney and Pat O'Brien featured. As the title implies, it is a rough and ready film story of the battleship boys, filmed with the co-operation of the United States navy.

TWO RISK DEATH ON MOUNT HOOD TO GET REMAINS

through the murky sulphurous fumes that swirled about his gas mask, Gary Leach, veteran mountain climber, clambered down the precipitous side of Mt. Hood crater before dawn today to bring back the body of Victor Von Normann, 22, University of Washington junior student. Since mid-afternoon Monday, Von Normann's crumpled body had lain in the crater.

200 Foot Fall

The chances were 1000 to 1 that the Hunt Point, Wash., youth was dead, mountain men said, either killed by his 200 foot fall from the crater rim or suffocated by the fumes that eternally fill the jagged hole nearly 10,000 feet up on the side of the mountain. But on that one chance, Leach endangered his life in the night climb down into the pit. Ten other men stood by ready to help. Four of them were members of the hiking party that had stood near Von Normann when he leaped too far over the crater's edge. Six were forest rangers, veterans of many a rescue expedition.

Thousands of feet down the mountain, state policemen waited with the receiving set of a short wave radio, ready to answer any instructions that came from Leach or the other members of the searching party. In this little resort town, dozens of other mountain experts sat up most of the night, waiting some word from the crater's rim.

Parents Wait Word

At Hunt Point, near Seattle, Von Normann's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Von Normann, and his 14-year old sister waited, too, hoping against hope that the youth who had been a member of the "Scouts," a private mountain climbing club, since he was a Boy Scout, might still be alive.

Three efforts to rescue the Washington youth had been made Monday afternoon and evening by Annie Faubion, packer for the U. S. forest service. Three times Faubion came within 30 feet of Von Normann's body—and three times was driven back by the fumes which rise from hundreds of jets on the crater floor, some so hot they cannot be touched. The three efforts completely exhausted Faubion.
