At Studio

"Men in White," starring Clark Gable, which opens today at the Studio theatre, brings not only a romantic new emotional team to the screen, but also one of the most dramatic stories ever filmed.

The dramatic background of the story is a modern hospital, vivid and gripping in the gamut of unvelled emotions which only a hospital knows.

New Juvenile Star at Craterian

A new juvenile star flashes across the cinema heavens in "You Belong to Me," opening for three days at the Craterian theatre today. His full name is David Jack Holt and he is but six years old. His chance for screen fame came when Dickie Moore suddenly fell ill and David was pressed into the role, and so ably does he play it that he is now a contract player and already is receiving fan letters by the hundreds. "You Belong to Me," which has Lee Tracy starred, with Helen Mack, Helen Morgan and Lynne Overman in featured roles with little David, tells the story of the drama that goes on behind the scenes of the vaudeville stage. Tracy, in a different type of role than he has played, on the screen before, is a broken-down vaudeville comic, who looks after the welfare of Helen Mack and her fashions little son (David) after her husband has died. Their courses separate and the manly little boy appoints himself as his mother's guardian, protests against his mother's marriage to another vaudeville and finally is sent to a military school. How, eventually, Tracy's love for the boy brings about his reformation forms the climax of the story.

Madge Evans has the leading feminine role. It shows Baxter as a doctor who is called "murderer" by the world because his new serum has failed and three people have died. He starts on a journey to scatter the wreckage of his life. On board a ship bound for the Canary Islands, he meets and falls in love with Madge Evans. When they reach the islands, a devastating plague of yellow fever threatens the inhabitants and Miss Evans falls victim to the plague. Inspired by his great love for her, Baxter fights back and vindicates himself with the world by putting an end to the epidemic through the use of his serum.
