

BEER BRINGS HUGE SUM TO HOP YARD WORKERS IN WEST

$4,000,000 Spent This Year in Harvesting Crop—Oregon Largest Producer—Yield Short This Year

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 13.—(AP)—Beer is pouring nearly $4,000,000 into the pockets of west coast hop workers. Other millions will soon flow into the bank accounts of growers. The bany spire of drying hoppers is in the air of country places of Oregon, Washington and California. The tall, green vines are stripped and growing brown. The hop picking season is drawing to a close. It will be a week or ten days before buyers drop their incognitos and begin to get down to terms with the producers. The current week finds them scouring over the countryside on unofficial inspections of quality and grades.

Oregon Crop Light
Oregon, the largest producer of the three coast states, will show a considerable reduction in production for this season, while Washington will produce slightly more than last year, and the California yield will run close to that of 1933. Dealers declare, however, that the decrease in production will be more than offset by a very material increase in quality.

West coast hops travel far to the brewing centers of the world. They are much favored in continental Europe, and England buys in great quantities. Many thousands of bales, of course, are used by domestic brewers.

Pound Per Barrel
Competent observers estimate the Oregon crop this year at 90,000 bales compared with 105,000 bales last year. A bale weighs about 190 pounds. Few brewers use more than one pound of hops to a barrel of beer.

In Washington production is estimated at 50,000 bales compared with 42,000 last year, while in California this year's total yield will be around 52,700 bales compared with 54,000 a year ago.

Growers estimate it costs about $20 a bale to harvest, dry and bale the crop. This would bring something like $1,800,000 to Oregon for such labor; $1,100,000 to California, and about $1,000,000 to the state of Washington.

Picking Pay Boosted
Pickers this year received between $1.25 and $1.50 a hundred pounds for working in the yards, compared with an extreme top of $1 and an average of between 80 and 90 cents a hundred in 1933.

There has yet been no general opening of the market, but buyers generally predict quotations will range from 23 to 25 cents a pound. Growers have ideas of higher prices. In Portland this week the sale of 34 bales of fuggies at 31 cents a pound was confirmed. Salem reported a current price of 20 cents for 1933 clusters, and 35 cents for top fuggies. Yakima, the heart of the industry in Washington, had as yet received no overtures from buyers. California centers believed 20 cents would be the general offer.

SINCLAIR TO SEEK EPIC REFERENDUM IF SOLONS REFUSE

Candidate Returns to Find Democrats Three Largest Counties in State Will Accord Full Support

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 13.—(AP)—Upon Sinclair stated, upon his return to San Francisco Wednesday from a two weeks' trip east, he will carry his EPIC (end poverty in California) program directly to the people through referenda. If necessary, in the event he is elected governor of the state.

The novelistic and former socialist, now democratic nominee for governor who conferred with President Roosevelt, Postmaster General James A. Farley and other administration officials on his eastern trip, learned upon his arrival the democratic central committees of the state's three largest counties have voted to support his candidacy.

Three Vote Support.
San Francisco, Los Angeles and Alameda county committees went on record last night for his support, although the Monterey county committee voted against him on his policies, and most of the committees reporting declined to commit themselves either way.

The man whose nomination has resulted in the defection from the party of several democratic leaders, declined to discuss his conversation with President Roosevelt, saying only: "Any statement as to what happened in our meeting" must come from the president.

He expressed belief his visit to the postmaster general was "productive," but again said any statement "along these lines must be made by Farley."

Don't Want Conservative Aid.
Speaking of party leaders who have refused to support him, Sinclair said: "I hope that all such men as Justice Wardell (one of his opponents for democratic nomination) and Matt Sullivan will go to the other side. They do not fit in with the new idea of democracy."

Sullivan, classed as a "progressive"
