LINDBERGH CONFRONTS SUSPECT

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 27.-

The story behind General Johnson's trick hint of NRA dealings with Bupreme Court Justice Brandeis may remain forever a secret be-tween the gener-al and the jus-tice. Johnson probably never will choose to amplify his inu-endo. Mr. Brandeis naturally can-not dignify the unofficially reply in detail.

There is, however, one place where you can get some salient facts. A certain presidential adviser, not con-pected with Johnson or Brandels, has known the essential details of the estings for some time. His account ears its own air of authenticity and partly confirmable in a responsible NRA quarter.

This account indicates that if Mr. Brandels has been in any way an invisible guiding inspiration to the ter approach to the problem, in his private opinion. The justice is supposed to have asserted also that he did not, as a citizen, approve of leiting business groups form trade associations, which, in effect, suspended Col. L. the anti-trust laws. That was all, Some time during the summer year Johnson telephoned Brandels at the Brandels summer home. Chatham, Mass., to announce that he bad settled the garment workers' had settled the garment workers' strike. NRAers say they assumed Johnson was proud of that accomplishment and wanted to tell Mr. Brandels about it. as Mr. Brandels was once a union attorney.

Their next meeting was in Wash-ington several months later, when Johnson, apparently disturbed by cri-ticism, sought out Brandels for advice. The jurist refused to be drawn in, said that, as Johnson had refused his earlier counsel, he could only say.

months afterward Johnso again went to Mr Brandels for advice (it was in May this year) and again the only thing for him to do was to resign, as he had let things get out of hand; that business had ridden roughshod over the administration as a result of Johnson policies. Since then Johnson bad seen Justice Brandels in Johnson bad seen Justice Brandels no more, but the general has finally resigned.

In view of this situation, it is quite possible the incident will be marked closed and relegated to that limbo of duds which have fallen in the mitist of Armers for their crops, and there was rising, provided as him and death early today of a man extent water-borne traffic, higher returns to farmers for their crops, and the metal trades and building trades delegates met to hear reports of their officers and discuss their problems formed to the high-building loans to real estate and commercial firms.
