SUGAR SURPLUS FROM JAVA MAY BE USED IN GAS... Dutch Authorities May Force Oil Companies To Mix Pure Alcohol From Sugar With All Gasoline Sold

Dutch Authorities May Force Oil Companies To Mix Pure Alcohol From Sugar With All Gasoline Sold... Voluntary mixing of alcohol and petrol also obtains in Germany, Czechoslovakia and Sweden.

Dutch Authorities May Force Oil Companies To Mix Pure Alcohol From Sugar With All Gasoline Sold... Chief exponent of this scheme in Holland is J. S. Visser of Santpoort, who started a campaign about a year ago to induce the oil companies to do something for the Dutch sugar-beet industry.

Dutch Authorities May Force Oil Companies To Mix Pure Alcohol From Sugar With All Gasoline Sold... Visser explained that his idea is to use the sugar beet for the finest sugar only, leaving the dregs to be converted into molasses and thence into alcohol.

Dutch Authorities May Force Oil Companies To Mix Pure Alcohol From Sugar With All Gasoline Sold... But the Japanese have discovered the real possibility in that huge surplus of cane sugar in Java which he remarked, "The Japanese have to import gasoline, and during the trade negotiations in Batavia they offered to buy all the molasses which Java produces. The deal eventually fell through because the Japanese insisted that it must be carried in Japanese ships, but it set the Dutch authorities to thinking and they are now considering converting the Java molasses into pure alcohol and exporting it to Japan and elsewhere."

Dutch Authorities May Force Oil Companies To Mix Pure Alcohol From Sugar With All Gasoline Sold... "If that idea spreads to Cuba, we shall see a big change in the whole cane sugar picture, and Chamberlain schemes will no longer be needed."
