

LADLEY PRAISES THOSE WHO AIDED IN VAN DYKE HUNT

High praise is given by George T. Laidley to the forest service, officers and men of the Union Creek CCC camp, the state police and all others for the part they took in the search for the first of the week for Verne Van Dyke, Medford hunter lost in the wilds of the Umpqua divide. Laidley, a timber cruiser and veteran woodsman, was Van Dyke's hunting companion and in charge of the hunt for him.

Laidley said yesterday that when the alarm was spread that Van Dyke was missing, Supervisor Fred Warner of the Union Creek CCC camp sent 35 men at the first call for help, and promised more if needed. The men he sent were all expert hillmen. The state police also responded, and detailed Game Warden Ed Walker to the case. Members of the forest service also gave valuable assistance. All the agencies voluntarily placed themselves under Laidley, who organized a circling movement through the area where Van Dyke was last seen.

Laidley states that as a result of the co-operation the searches were less than "half an hour behind Van Dyke" when he came to the road and was found.

Following Van Dyke's return to safety last Tuesday, Laidley said in the field found where Van Dyke had camped Sunday night with his campfire still smoking. He was trailed to where he camped Monday night and were hot on his trail just before Van Dyke emerged, weak and wobbly, on the road.

Laidley, when Van Dyke failed to appear per schedule, conducted a one-man hunt all Sunday afternoon. He believes that he and Van Dyke were in a "willow patch" at the same time Sunday afternoon but, owing to intensity of the falling snow, were unable to see each other. Laidley said it was the most severe snowstorm he ever encountered in southern Oregon, and that about eight inches fell in a couple of hours.

When darkness fell Sunday night, Laidley continued his hunt and did not stop until close to midnight when he "holed up" in a hollow pine tree. About 3 o'clock Monday morning a forest ranger came for him and after securing food and some dry clothes, Laidley began mustering searchers for continuance of the hunt.

All the tracks and signs found by the searchers indicate that Van Dyke did his wandering around Gray Rock butte and near the head of Bitter creek, and that at one stage he had passed within a short distance of where his auto was parked and at another time had crossed the road upon which he was found.
