That "middle-of-the-road" phrase does not have a very specific meaning any more. Too much depends on what radical or conservative camp you are viewing the road from.

Clay Williams—a hard-boiled, capable former tobacco manufacturer whose industry has not accepted an NRA code.

Arthur Whiteside—an intelligent Wall-streeter who signed the chamber of commerce statement a week ago urging that the NRA be scrapped.

Sidney Hillman—a rough-and-tumble, efficient labor leader, who has the clothing industry under the thumb of his union.

Leon Marshall—a moderate liberal college professor, who has been at Johns Hopkins trying to figure out how to humanize law.
