

NORTHWEST GAINS VAST BENEFIT BY LABORS OF CCC

Recreational projects worth millions of dollars to the Pacific Northwest have been partially or wholly completed by the civilian conservation corps in the national forests of Oregon and Washington, according to statements given out by the U. S. forest service. Total accomplishments in the two states since the inception of the CCC in April, 1933, are valued at $15,175,946.

Visitors to the hundreds of recreation spots in Oregon and Washington have been impressed this summer by the improved accommodations they have found. Approximately 650 acres of free public camp grounds have been prepared by the civilian conservation corps. Many hundreds of necessary buildings and other facilities that go with these grounds also have been completed. A total of 164,000 feet of water pipe line has been laid, providing free water for campground use. Some 4,000 miles of forest roads have been constructed in Oregon and Washington, and it is pointed out that while these roads in most instances are constructed primarily for fire protection, they also fit in admirably with recreational projects, making a large area of choice recreation districts now available to the pleasure seeking public.

Asked whether the forest fire hazard is not increased by the increased forest and mountain areas to recreation seekers, C. J. Buck, regional forester, explained that long experience of the forest service has provided beyond question that the slight increase in fire danger from making isolated districts accessible by forest roads is more than counteracted by the increased protection made possible by the roads.

CITY FORTUNATE HAVING GLEEMEN

By Arthur W. Warnock

Medford is one of the very few cities of its size, that can boast as fine a civic male choir as the Medford Gleemen. The Gleemen are in a class all by themselves for the high character of their membership, their devotion to their community, and their excellence as to singing. A well-organized, well-dressed, efficient group.

Male choirs afford splendid advertisements for their home towns and Medford is no exception. Los Angeles is noted for its famous John Smallman choir, San Francisco for its Bohemian club choir, Eugene for its Gleemen, Portland for its Apollo club and Minneapolis for its Apollo club of 125 men and in existence for over 40 years. Indeed, some of the original members are still active in the Minneapolis choir. Every city boasting a male choir realizes it has, in its singing citizens, a force for education, culture and the finest publicity, quite apart for its sheer entertainment.

This week is the time for Medford citizens to show their appreciation of the Gleemen and their work as the sale of associate memberships for the season's two fine concerts is pushed. H. J. Fletscher, director of the drive, or any of his campaign committee, will try to call upon you for your membership but if they fail to do so, you are earnestly asked to drop in at any Medford music store and sign up there. Your support will be a great incentive to this non-profit musical organization which has helped the community so much during the past three years.

PACIFIC GREYHOUND BUS LINE HONORED

At the convention of the National Association of Motor Bus Operators, recently held in Cleveland, Pacific Greyhound was awarded the trophy for completeness and efficiency in maintenance, method and practices. Large inter-city bus fleets throughout the country compete yearly for this prize and in winning it, Pacific Greyhound Lines showed an unusually high degree of thoroughness in maintaining their equipment.

When receiving the trophy on behalf of his company, President W. E. Travis said, "Pacific Greyhound Lines has always considered it their duty to the traveling public to keep every piece of equipment in first class condition, not only from a mechanical standpoint, but from that of cleanliness, appearance and operating as well. A few people realize the extent of rigid inspections, or the care and effort we expend in servicing and grooming every Greyhound bus before every journey."
