Common Sense Wins

THE election of General Martin was a victory of common sense over partisanship, of principle over party.

In a state where Republicans outnumber Democrats nearly two to one General Martin took the lead at the outset and has maintained it ever since.

The result is a great tribute to him as a man, and also a great tribute to the good judgment of the people of this state.

For as the Mail Tribune pointed out, when the campaign opened,—on the ground of his personal qualifications for the job, Congressman Martin stood head and shoulders above his two opponents.

WHY then not elect him? WHY blindly bow to the crack of any party whip? WHY meekly answer the command of any party boss, when the welfare of this state, demanded the best ability in the state house that could possibly be provided.

The people of this county and the people of the state, answered that question with an emphatic "Why INDEED!"

WHY give the position of highest honor and greatest responsibility in Oregon to "just another politician"; WHY give it to "just another demagogue"? WHY not be SENSIBLE, and give it, regardless of party to the man, who by experience, character and training was—and is—best qualified for it.

THAT is what the people DID. The result, we feel sure, will be of tremendous benefit to this state.

It will serve notice on the time-serving and back-slapping politicians, that the people of Oregon demand something MORE in a candidate for high office, than the gift of gab, and a town-pump hand shake.

It will serve notice on the professional agitators and table thumpers, that the people demand something MORE than time-honored appeals to class hatreds and class prejudices,—the wolf cry of "Wall Street!"

It will in short clear up the political atmosphere, which was so badly in need of clearing,—put it upon something approaching, a COMMON SENSE AND RATIONAL BASIS.

For this let all good citizens be duly thankful.

The Hard Job Is Ahead

NATURALLY the Mail Tribune is delighted with the victory of its candidate for governor. We fought for General Martin hard because we believed in him.

On the other hand, the dominant sentiment of this newspaper is not one of elation. We realize too well that the General's hardest task lies before him; that under conditions which exist today, the successful gubernatorial candidate was bound to find a rough road, and an uphill pull, before him.

THE tax situation in the state is critical. The financial situation is not much better. Business has improved, but has a long way to go before unrest and distress cease to be a major problem.

To a less determined, experienced and realistic character, the future might well appear somewhat appalling.

But General Martin has one outstanding advantage over most candidates who have been elevated to this high office. He has made no promises that must be redeemed; has made no deals that can bob up to plague him; has acquired no partisan debts that must be paid.

He goes into office A FREE MAN,—rather than a party man. He has literally what many office holders claim but seldom possess,—"no interest to serve but the PUBLIC interest."

With such a clear purpose, with such a free field, and with the high qualities of character and ability which he possesses, we feel sure, that the obstacles before him will be successfully surmounted; and with that popular support which he deserves, his administration will be a most successful one.

The National Result

THERE is only one word for the elections in the country as a whole—UNPRECEDENTED!

Nothing like it was expected, nothing approaching it has ever happened before. Imagine rock-ribbed Pennsylvania electing a democratic governor (the first time in a generation) and a democratic senator (the first time since the Civil War!)

Needless to say this paper is glad the New Deal has been endorsed so emphatically by the people of this country, for in the main purposes of that program, it heartily believes.

But our enthusiasm is tempered by the fear that such an overwhelming endorsement, may prove too heady stuff for some of the democratic enthusiasts in Washington.

IF it is interpreted as a blanket endorsement for EVERY feature of the New Deal, an OK for whatever new experiment, the left wingers may wish to try, we see in this landslide, not only danger for the country, but a trying time for President Roosevelt during the next two years.

For the country greatly needs stabilization and business confidence. It should have at the earliest possible time, a balanced budget, and a currency no longer threatened by unregulated inflation.

The country can't continue its spending program indefinitely, PERMANENT prosperity can't return until business knows, more definitely than it knows today, just what lies ahead.

We are sure this is the view of President Roosevelt, and the conservative wing of his party. But if the net result of this overwhelming victory should be to make the turn to the left even more extreme than it was before, give greater power to the radicals and extremists than they had, then our prediction is this amazing avalanche of votes will prove in the end, to be more an embarrassment than an encouragement not only to President Roosevelt but to his party.

Communications

To the Editor: Would you please grant enough space in the Mail Tribune for the enclosed poetry? I wrote it myself and every word is true.

Without a cent, to exist just any old way? But he never complains of those he's sending pains!

He gave health, happiness, all—just to answer the call For men who were strong and were true;

Now, he's forgotten by that land he thought was so grand, But he still loves the Red, White and Blue.

There was one husky lad, the pride of his dad, The emblem of his mother's joys, Who gave up his home and all that he owned,

For his Country—like thousands of boys. With hearts torn and sad, his dear old mother and dad, Smiled when he passed exams O K.

He was husky and strong, as he marched along In his patriotic and manlike way. He went to fight for the land, that so was so grand,

And the ones that for him often cried; But the Hell he went through, only God above knew, And the boys who stood by his side.

Time passed slowly away, then came Armistice day, The Nations gave thanks — everywhere. But many homes were sad, for the boys they'd had Slept 'neath the poppies — Over There.

But the lad who had gone, while healthy and strong, Who was willing to give his last breath For the Land of the Free—for you, and for me, Returned—just a waiting for death.

He had been big and strong, now his lungs were "gone." In his side was unbearable pain. He was skinny and bent, you could tell he had spent Long, torturous days without gain.

You could see every day that he wasted away; There was no kind of work he could do. He could not get a cent for the time he had spent, His life was ruined—it was through.

Now something was wrong, for his papers were gone; 'Twas a year before they were found. Doesn't that seem queer, for did you ever hear Of any lost, when for war they were bound?

His dear old dad, who was so proud of the lad, Passed away many years ago. Perhaps God thought it best, so took him to rest, In order that he'd never know.

His mother is old, and of proud ancestral mold; Her hair is silvery gray. 'Tis pitiful to see, as on bended knee, For the health of her son she will pray.

He has managed somehow to "get by" till now, But the "end of the rope" he has reached. It seems but a ruse, when they try to excuse The few dollars for which he has been seceded.

Do you know what it means, or just how it seems, To be penniless, hungry, and ill? No place to stay—dreading each coming day, As a great, unanswerable bill?

Now, don't you suppose, that every soldier knows He is more than deserving of pay? Do you think it is right—he be left in such plight—
