Comedy Team On Craterian Screen

While Zasu trembles in fear of W. C. Fields' biting "the hand that feeds him," that gallant gentleman, with his courtly "furrin' ways, is merely impressing a kiss on the lily white fingers of his bride. It's a scene from "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," starting today at the Craterian theater, with Zasu Pitts portraying the fluttery Miss Hazy and Evelyn Venable as Lucy Olcott and Kent Taylor as Bob Redding.

New Star Scoring Hit, Rialto Drama

One of the most exciting ways to tell a big story is to set in motion a smaller one which, as it develops, opens one window of the theme after another, until from its narrow confines one sees the play of mighty forces. This is the adventurous and highly successful technique used in presenting "Marie Galante," which opened at the Rialto theater yesterday. Ketti Gallian, a newcomer, portrays Marie, a French girl abandoned by the captain of a tramp steamer, to whom she was delivering a telegram. Reaching Panama, she is filled with only one idea—the determination to get home again—and through her tiny, personal crisis, as she seeks help from one man after another in the Canal Zone, is gradually revealed the gargantuan plot of a munitions firm to start a war by blowing up the U. S. navy as it passes through the canal. One by one, the disguises are removed from the kindly or officious or indifferent people who surround Marie, and she learns that Trenchi (Leslie Fenton) and Crawford (Spencer Tracy), the U. S. student of tropical diseases, and Ratcliff (Robert Loraine), the general English victor, are secret service agents of their respective countries, bent on forestalling the enemy to world peace. Brogard (Siegfried Rumann), the picture winds up to a climax which, played in the power house of a dam, with the turbines screaming and plenty of dynamite on hand, is as thrilling as anything brought to the screen this year. As Time, the weekly news magazine, points out, difficulties had to be overcome in the making of the picture. Germany objected to the villain, and although he is left with a strong accent and Prussian haircut, he is also left without nationality. The same applied to the Japanese Tenoki, the U. S. navy, the government of Panama, the Canal Zone authorities. Arrangements satisfactory to all parties were apparently made, and no scenes had to be reshot. Mrs. Lumsden Leaving—Mrs. Bossie Lumsden is leaving Friday for Portland, to visit her son Treve and family, for a month.
