NEW YORK DAY BY DAY By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, Nov. 13. — Perhaps New York's best known florist is the flaming red-haired lady, Irene Hayes, who came out of one of those Kansas Sasparilla Corners a dozen years ago, wide-eyed with prairie wonder and an idea. Today on a Park avenue corner she is a dominating figure of her trade.

Her greatest achievement during the depression. She set up a psychological idea in a shop where most people were in no mood or purse for life's luxuries.

How could a man be entirely dependent with a cravat in his lapel or a lady melancholy with a violet corsage.

Many established florists were hanging up the shutters while she was adding gaudy little motor wagons to deliver her wares.

There are few situations so tant as that of a layman at a first night performance waiting the entrance of the actress wife in the hall.

Everybody who sees Vincent Astor the first time is surprised by his physique. He has the build of a rugged and bronzed lumber jack.

After a week-end rainfall of 5.32 inches at Minneapolis, a weather bureau statistician figured that 8,000,000 gallons of water had fallen on the 37,000-acre city area.

Figures show that the average motorist paid $47.31 to special motor taxes in 1933, a three dollar increase over 1932.

Comment on the Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS

YOU read in this column yesterday that 65,280 hunters in the nine counties of the Shasta-Cascade Wonderland spent $2,500,000 during the deer season just closed.

Now a word as to fishing money. During the fishing season that is just coming to a close, fishermen in the Shasta-Cascade Wonderland spent a total of $7,000,000.

Now let's put two and two together. When that is done, we discover, if the figures are correct, that during the year just closing hunters and fishermen spent in the nine counties of the Shasta-Cascade Wonderland a very considerable sum of $10,000,000.

That is a lot of money. It amounts to an average of $340 for EACH FAMILY in the Wonderland, and to more than $1,100,000 per county.

THE hunting figures are vouched for by the regional office of the forest service in San Francisco. The fishing figures were compiled by the statistical department of the California fish and game commission— which, using SERA labor, has made an unusually complete study of fishermen's expenditures this year.

GETTING back to hunting, the San Francisco regional office of the forest service tells us that in a 30-day period during the hunting season 8,160 hunters in the Shasta national forest were responsible for only TWELVE fires.

That is anything but a bad record. Here in Oregon, going on the assumption that hunters are a careless lot, not to be compared in caution with fishermen, we have been steadily pushing the hunting season farther back into the fall, getting it out of the season when it is most enjoyable to go hunting and into the wetter fall months.

THESE figures, from the sources here given, were quoted to this writer by Tom Stanley, secretary of the Shasta-Cascade Wonderland association, whose job it is to influence travel into these nine counties in Southern Oregon and Northern California.

What we are chiefly concerned with is the NEW MONEY brought into the Wonderland area by sportsmen from the outside. It is the business of the Shasta-Cascade Wonderland association, skippered by Tom Stanley and Bert Hall, with a capable board of directors behind them, to bring in as much of this new business as possible by stimulating travel into the Wonderland area.

SOMEBODY, in all probability, will arise at about this point to remark that the hotels, the restaurants and the sporting goods stores get the bulk of the new money brought in, so what good does it do the rest of us?

Try answering this question: What do the hotels, the restaurants, the garages and the sporting goods stores do with the money when they get it? Why, they SPEND it, of course— spend it with the rest of us, for real labor, food, clothing and services of all sorts.

When a new dollar comes into the community, it doesn't take long for it to get spread all around.

TEXAS DRY LAW OPENLY IGNORED IN SOME PARTS

Southern Half of State Wet — Northern and Western Portions Maintain Semblance of Dry Conformity

By W. Winston Copland United Press Staff Correspondent. FORT WORTH, Texas. (UP)—Although Texas officially is dry, a wave of "liberalism" has swept it to the extent that in many places the state dry law is as dead as Charles Dickens' Marley.

Dr. Carmichael's tooth napkins are small squares of specially treated cloth impregnated with a friction powder. It is used by folding over the end of the finger to give the teeth a dry rub.

At Austin, the state capital, there are about 40 different places where liquor can be bought, most of them white-open. Some of them are almost within the shadow of the capitol.

In San Antonio neon signs openly announce bars. Here, too, liquor has ceased to be a political question. The resort city of Galveston, with a population of only about 50,000, boasts 92 bars.

State and local police officers say there is no use of making arrests as juries will not convict. Their argument is foretold, too, for court records show that juries refuse to pronounce guilt in liquor cases.

Beer was legalized in Texas more than a year ago. But the legalization of liquor still has to be submitted to a vote of the people in a constitutional amendment. The legislature which convenes in January is expected to put the question to popular vote.

Arrangements for the joint meeting were completed last week by a committee from the local club of Carl Stuart and Charles Reames and they state a good time is being arranged for all and hope a good turnout from the local club will attend. It is to be a ladies' night for both clubs and each lion is asked to bring his wife or partner and a friend and partner if possible.

This joint meeting of the two clubs has been looked forward to for some time and a good time is assured all when any of the Klamath den are present.

Dinner will be served at 8 p. m. and dancing and stunts will be enjoyed after the dinner. District governor Ted Gillenwaters will be present and will give a message that no doubt will be of benefit to every lion.

Regular noon luncheon at the Colonial club will be held Wednesday of this week and all are asked to attend and get ready to go to Pinehurst.
