One of the many gripping scenes today and Monday at the Rialto in "Straight Is the Way," playing theatre shows May Robson, as Franchot Tone's mother, criticizing the poor associations he has chosen for himself, particularly Gladys George, whom the odd lady feels is totally unworthy of her son's attentions.

With Karen Morley, C. It pictures his struggles to shake off his earlier associations of ill repute—even the beautiful blonde Miss George, who had loved him before he was sent to prison.
