

Fans Pass Up Turkey For Gripping Details of Tiger, Colonial Battle

(By Dick Applegate)

Boy, did the broadcast of the game yesterday play havoc with a lot of Thanksgiving dinners, as anxious housewives tried vainly to pry their raving families away from the radio to come and have just one more piece of mince pie!

Sales talks on the merits of the new sage dressing recipe went unheeded as local fans who were unable to be in Portland heard by proxy probably the most brilliant record ever turned in by a red and black team. The game left most of the men so weak that it was all they could do to crawl back to the table for two more helpings of turkey.

Fighting grimly in their own territory most of the time with the Washington team, the breaks, and the sea of sticky ooze known as the Multnomah stadium clanking at the feet of their clanking laterals, reverses, flupouts and passes, the Medford squad had to rely on straight football except for the one pass, Ghelardi to Kunsman, which paved the way for Bates to plunge over from the two-yard line for the only Medford score of the day.

The rest of the time they had to fight desperately to keep out of the hole that DeWitt's splendid punting kept them in. Last week I mentioned that the thing above all others that I liked to see in a game was the individual efforts of a player to get his team out of just such a hole. How much more thrilling it must have been to see the entire team doing that! It breaks my heart, as it must yours, to have missed it.

The way kindred was getting those punts off from behind his own goal! Four times, in that heart-breaking second half, if it weren't for unethical, and apt to be misconstrued, I'd like to kiss that guy for that when he gets in on this evening's train.

Put yourself in his place for a few seconds. The game tied at six-all, and a desperate Washington team hammering relentlessly at the line. A long kick that rolls out of bounds on the two-yard line. First and ten there. It might as well be first and two miles, what with the tide coming in on that lousy field, which, by the way, would be a disgrace to the red-top school house. A blocked kick there meant the game. He knew that. A fumble would mean the same thing. He knew that, too. The ball
