AUTO DEATH TOLL IN PORTLAND 82, SPURS NEW CURBS

Public Opinion Now Favors Jail For Speeders Who Maim and Kill—Legislative Action Demanded.

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 1.—(AP)—The "let's quit killing" campaign which ended today left an aroused public which—shuddering for 82 martyrs of speed—will applaud safety legislation.

This was the opinion of W. R. MacDonald, Oregon State Motor association director who was general chairman of the campaign sponsored by the Portland Oregonian and the state motor association.

Another salutary effect expected by the sponsors will be public sentiment favoring stiff "jolts" for traffic violators.

The Portland police fiscal year ended yesterday with a new all-time traffic accident fatality record of 82 set. This was six above the previous all-time high set in 1931 and 24 more than last year. Some of the victims never knew what hit them while others died slow, agonizing deaths.

Hit and run drivers have been rampant.

Traffic safety legislation frequently is subordinated to other questions of the hour. But the "let's quit killing" campaign made safety itself the question of the hour, and the Portland city council passed a "back seat drinking" ordinance.

The ordinance forbids drinking either by operator or occupants of any moving or parked motor vehicle inside city limits.

When the state legislature meets in January a safety responsibility bill will be introduced. This bill, modeled after an American Automobile association bill enacted in a number of states, would provide that motorists who cause personal or property damage be held for strict financial accountability on penalty of revocation of their operator's licenses.

Candle Light Sale Of Humane Society Slated Dec. 7 and 8

Friday and Saturday, December 7 and 8, have been announced as dates for the annual "Candle-lite" sale of the Jackson County Humane society. The sale will open Friday at 10 a. m. in the Holland Hotel building, corner of Fir and Sixth streets.

First quality, new and slightly used clothing will be offered and buyers have a chance to get quality garments for practically nothing. Clothing for men and women will be included in the sale and a special table of modest Christmas gifts, within the reach of all, will be featured, also assortment of hats, negligee, shoes, household goods and children's wearing apparel.

The sale will be conducted in line with former sales offered by the Humane society. "It is not a rummage sale, it is a value sale such as all of the sales have been in the past," one of the society's leaders said.

SEN. M'NARY MAPS NEW COURSE FOR REPUBLICAN SHIP

new planning, or whether it was the opportunism of business and financial disaster that restored the party beyond the point."

And then Senator McNary made the observation that "parties do not die when issues arise to inspire them, as issues infallibly do."

Personal Cares First

Continuing to quote the senator, the Oregonian article continued: "The voter who is pressed down by personal cares cannot be made to interest himself in the presumptive violence to the constitutional separation of powers, congress control of commerce, and the due process clause by laws that are theoretically designed to relieve his distress and which he hopes will relieve his distress.

"For that matter, the constitutionality of congressional laws is not determinable in the political forum. The supreme court still lives and it has not failed us yet. Moreover, if laws do, indeed, violate personal and property rigrts they ought to be condemned whether the violated rights are guaranteed by the constitution or not."

The Oregonian quoted McNary as having declared: "I hope for support in congress in a move to abolish price fixing."

He said he believes the Bankhead amendment limiting the cotton crop and applying "an unbearable tax upon cotton surplus," should be repealed. He observed that "banishment of child labor and of sweatshops, and the efforts toward wage and hour regulation and spread of employment, deserve everybody's commendation."

He said he believes "in the principles of old age pensions and unemployment insurance," and hopes for "co-operation of Republicans in the adoption of sound measures carrying these principles into effect.

Loans for Farmers

"The present practice of making government loans to industry at low rates of interest should be extended to the farmer. The farmer, from the tobacco grower of Connecticut to the wheat grower of the middle west and eastern Oregon, is struggling under indebtedness and high taxes and lack of price parity for his products.

"Low interest government loans to farmers would be an insurance against inflation, for if the farmer is not relieved of some of his present burdens he will demand depreciated currency wherewith to pay his debts.

"I offer these suggestions as a matter of public expediency, not as a matter of party expediency, though measures that improve the public welfare redound to the credit of the organization that sponsors them.

"Yet, I repeat, that the Republicans in congress ought to do their utmost to rescue the country, in cooperation with the administration or otherwise."

Senator McNary said there were other subjects of importance that could not be discussed in the limited time at his disposal, the Oregonian said.

After a summer of relaxation at his farm near Salem, Senator McNary has recovered from a functional disorder which bothered him during the last congress. He has gained ten pounds in weight and looks healthier than for several years.

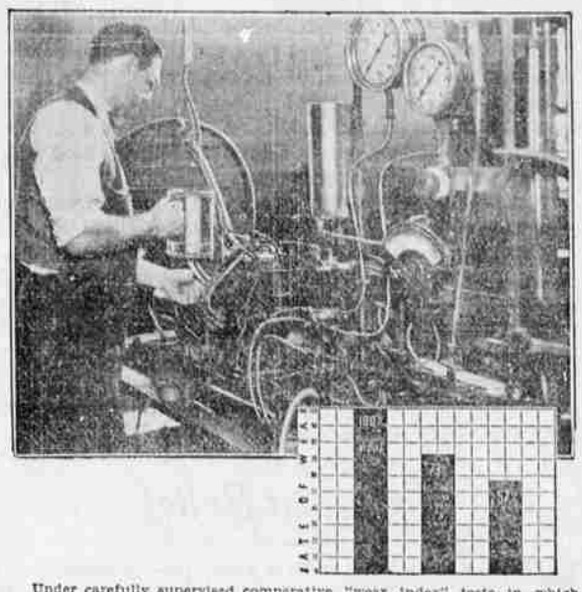
Less Wear With Triton



Under carefully supervised comparative "wear index" tests in which Triton motor oil, Union Oil company's new pure paraffin-base lubricant made from California wax-bearing crudes, was observed in operation in a dynamometer laboratory engine along with a high grade eastern oil and a high grade western oil, results showed that 27 per cent less wear occurred during the period the engine was lubricated with Triton than while being lubricated with its nearest competitor. These charts indicate the comparative results of the "wear index" tests.
