Laughing Low-Down on Hollywood

Hailed as the "laughing low-down on a couple of Hollywood upstarts," "365 Nights in Hollywood," with Jas. Dunn and Alice Faye in the leading roles, is at the Rialto theater for today and Monday.

From advance reports, here at last is a story with a different slant on the movie colony. Telling the hilarious happenings of a girl, a boy, and two adagio ice-men who turn the flicker city upside down, the play is said to be one of the fastest and funniest feature comedies ever released.

With most of the action taking place inside a fake movie school, with Dunn as the young director and Alice Faye as the would-be star, things take on a novel turn when the director decides to take a chance and make a real movie out of what is supposed to be just a "come-on" for sucker money.

Mitchell and Durant, the two knockabout comedians, are the ice-men who contribute no little to the fun.

Bulls Returns Here—S. M. Bullis of the California Oregon Power Co. returned Thursday from a brief business visit in Klamath Falls.

"Murder at the Vanities," the film adapted from Earl Carroll's stage hit, and which combines, for the first time, a brilliant musical show and a murder mystery, comes to the Hoxby theater today, with the premiere of an elaborate musical show.

While girls are dancing and singing, and while the audience is in tune with the frivolity of the evening, a mysterious murder takes place.

With the aid of 2 adagio ice-men
