

LINDBERGH BILLS EXHIBITED BEFORE FINDING OF BODY

stress and the state now is reported to have obtained evidence linking all but a few hundred dollars to Hauptmann.

Scores of the auditors, accountants, federal investigators and detectives who ran down the money and checked it are reputedly on the state's witness list.

Clerks, and one or two executives of the New York banking house of J. P. Morgan and company, where the packet of ransom bills was made up, are also expected to testify.

A single motive—extortion—led to the crime, state officials believe. The new evidence will be used by the state, a member of the prosecuting staff said, in its efforts to prove that Hauptmann alone abducted Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., collected the ransom and disposed of it himself.

Defense attorneys hold that a "gang" committed the crime while Hauptmann told New York police that the ransom money, about $15,000, found in his garage, was given to him by Isador Fisch, a friend who has since died.

New witnesses have been found, it was reported by a state source, to support the state's claim that Hauptmann disposed of some of the money long before the time he said Fisch entrusted it to his care.

Bonds Advance On Stock Mart Rise

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(P)—Secondary bonds were responsive to a rising stock market, and near the end of the session numerous gains ranging from fractions to more than a point were in evidence.

U. S. governments and prime corporate loans also contributed a number of modest advances.

The foreign list was generally steady.

JAIL SENTENCES GIVEN TWO AFTER LIQUOR CLEANUP

be on my own. She said she was aiding three children, and her daughter, "Committing a crime to avoid charity is no excuse, under the law," the court observed.

Elsie Langlot, the daughter had nothing to say. Her 16-month-old baby prattled about the courtroom, during the proceedings.

The court said it would take the matter of sentence under advisement until Monday.

"I want to determine just what is necessary in these cases," the court said. "There is no use of giving a fine. That is just a form of licensing. They will just sell more liquor, and make more profits to pay their fines. A jail sentence seems to be necessary."

State police testified that they had known "for about a year, liquor was being sold, at the house rented by the accused," but never could secure direct evidence, until the coming of state liquor commission investigators a month ago. No complaints were filed against the place. It was also revealed.

CCC AND FOREST CHIEFS TO MEET

Superintendents of the CCC camps located within the Rogue River national forest and all local forest service officials will attend a conference to be held at the fairgrounds detachment headquarters, January 2, with Major Clarence H. Armstrong, commanding officer of Medford CCC district, and officers of his staff.

Purpose of the meeting is to discuss phases of the work being carried on by the Civilian Conservation Corps in the national forest and to correlate the work of the CCC and the forest service.

Camp supervisors attending will be: B. E. Parker, Camp Carberry Creek; L. H. McGuire, Camp Applegate; Fred Warner, Camp Elk Creek; F. E. Ellett, Camp South Fork; John Walsh, Camp Evans Creek. Besides Karl Janouch, Rogue River forest supervisor and his aides, forest service rangers will also attend.
