"Fugitive Lady" in Rialto Film

Thrills are combined with romance and suspense in "Fugitive Lady," playing today and Saturday at the Rialto theater, with Florence Rice and Neil Hamilton in the romantic roles and Donald Cook heading the supporting cast of many well known players.

Thrills derive from the high speed race between Cook and Miss Rice in a fast roadster with motor cops along the country roads of beautiful San Fernando valley. The second thrill comes with the sequence showing a passenger train, carrying Miss Rice, speeding down the rails in the night to crash head-on with a slow freight. Head-on in which Miss Rice is seriously injured and her police matron killed, results in her being identified as the estranged wife of Hamilton.

The latter woman died in Hamilton's home. First he treats her as an impostor, but her intelligence and sincerity arouses his interest and sympathy, and aiding her to convalesce develops the romance.

Joan Bennett in Craterian Hit

To bundle or not to bundle! America of today may have its liquor controversies, its new deal—but two hundred years ago "bundling" was the topic of the day in Colonial America.

"Bundling" was the quaint American custom, practiced for the most part in the bleak New England states, of permitting marriageable daughters to entertain their swains "bundled" up in the girl's feather-bed. To conserve fuel, "bundling" was a necessity rather than a convenience—but, until its passing, it drew upon the heads of the colonists all of the fire and brim-stone sermons of which the early Puritans were notoriously capable.

Topic of the Day. That topic of Revolutionary War America is the subject today of a new film comedy, "The Pursuit of Happiness," with Francis Lederer in the title role. It is adapted from the New York stage play of last season, and comes Sunday to the Craterian theater.

The picture tells the story of Max Christian, a Hessian soldier, shanghaied into British service. Once in this land, he deserts, comes over to the side of the rebels and falls in love with the daughter of a colonist. His experiences with the quaint customs of the new nation form the film's comedy moments.

Joan Bennett is the girl, and Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland play her parents.

Sorrell and Son

The "talkie" version of "Sorrell and Son," Warwick Deeping's celebrated story of father love, which is now showing at the Studio theater, comes in answer to the wishes of the millions of men and women who cherish fond memories of the novel and the silent film.

In this new version, H. B. Warner again plays the role of Stephen Sorrell, and the present characterization is even more effective than the original since to it this splendid actor brings not only the magic of his speaking voice, but also the thousand little touches.

The marriage of the Princess Sophie of Anhalt-Zerbst, later Catherine II, to the half-mad grand duke Peter of Russia offered the producers an opportunity to create what is undoubtedly one of the most spectacular scenes ever flashed upon a screen in the historical romance, "Catherine the Great," which opens at the Studio Sunday.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. and Elizabeth Bergner have the leading roles.

S. C. Hodgen Here—S. C. Hodgen of Hodgen-Brewster Centennial Milling Co., Portland, was expected to arrive on the Oregonian this morning to confer in this city today and tomorrow with L. T. Robinson and F. C. Noble, field men in southern Oregon for Hodgen-Brewster.
