LOCAL BEER GAINS QUICK POPULARITY IN MEDFORD AREA

Rapidly coming to the fore as one of Medford's principal industrial plants is the new Southern Oregon Brewing company on North Fir street. Makers of the increasingly popular "Rogue Lager" beer, the brewery is one of only five in the entire state, and the only one south of Salem.

Medford is the ideal location for a brewery, according to Ted Gebauer, officer in the new firm. The water here is among the very few in the country which does not have to be processed, there being but one other on the coast.

Southern Oregon hops are the best in the world, by actual test, according to Gebauer, they having taken two first and one second prize at the National Hop show last year. Medford boxes for casing the bottled beer are used exclusively, and the company has a local payroll of $500 a week.

At the present time the beer is selling well in southern Oregon, with the orders increasing daily. Medford, of course, is the stronghold of "Rogue Lager," with 34 out of the 36 local dealers carrying it in stock. Of the six in Ashland, all have it on hand at all times. Other southern Oregon towns are showing an increasing "kicking" for it.

Klamath Falls, where distribution was only begun two weeks ago, now represents 15 accounts, with Yreka, Weed, Dunsmuir, Crescent City, and Grants Pass all showing interest. The company has a new brewmaster to supervise the processing. He is Max Lelschner, of Vienna. Lelschner served his apprenticeship in what was at that time the largest brewery in Europe. He graduated from brewery schools in the Austrian city, and in Munich, and comes to Medford with high recommendations. He is very enthusiastic about the situation in Medford.

The Medford plant is one of the most up-to-date ones on the coast, making use of copper for all equipment that comes in contact with the beer.

In the fermenting tanks, where the brew is kept for at least 12 days, the equipment is the best that could be bought. It is in the fermenting stage that a small amount of rice is added which gives the beer its sparkling clearness.

From the fermenting tank the mixture goes to the cooling room, where it is run over copper cooling coils, and from there it goes into the aging or "lagering" rooms. Lagering, according to Gebauer, is merely another word for aging. It is kept here for over six weeks at 33 degrees, just one degree above freezing. The plant has 20 lagering tanks, each one holding 110 barrels.

After the brew is completely lagged it is drawn off to the finishing tanks, of which there are nine, each holding 92 barrels. Here it is held for three weeks or longer, after which it is ready to be bottled or put into barrels.

At the present time both small bottles and half-gallon jugs are available, besides the kegs. The kegs used are of steel construction, heavily insulated with wood, and represent an investment of $13,200. The pitching process which insures the beer keeping in perfect condition, is carried on right at the Medford plant.

In building the plant the company spent $65,000, an amount which does not include special equipment which was purchased outside of Medford. The special equipment cost in excess of $30,000.

Familiar Story

Lending vivid reality to the "down to earth" American characters of Gene Stratton-Porter's famous best-seller, "A Girl of the Limberlost," the photoplay is a faithful transcription of the Gene Stratton-Porter original, and preserves the full flavor of the mid-western rural locale.

One of the two most popular of the author's works, the familiar story deals with the efforts of pretty Elvira Comstock to gain an education against the determined opposition of an unrelenting mother who has hated her child since birth.

It's a simple story, but beautifully told, and remarkably played by such splendid troupers as Louise Dresser, as the mother, Ralph Morgan, as the son, and Marian Marsh in the title role.

Fun Is Keynote of Craterian Picture

One of the gayest, merriest screen plays ever to reach Medford is now at the Craterian theatre where "Forsaking All Others" is showing.

To begin with, an all star cast that has Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Charles Butterworth, Billie Burke and Frances Drake in top roles, should make a good picture even better. But, given a story literally abounding in hilarious situations and a totally fresh slant on the old every-day triangle plot, the players have every chance in the world to make such a story thoroughly entertaining on the screen. And they have done so, grandly.

At the start Gable is shown rushing home from Spain with only one idea in mind—proposing marriage to Joan Crawford who, in turn, has become engaged to marry Robert Montgomery. And there is the triangle—three people friends since childhood. Naturally, with Joan so happy over her forthcoming marriage, Gable says nothing but prepares to do the honors of giving the bride away to his best friend.

When Montgomery fails to show up for the wedding, and wires Gable of his having married Frances Drake the night before, Joan goes to the mountains to forget. When she returns, however, the old flame pulls Montgomery back to her in spite of everything and everyone, and Joan starts the whole thing all over again.

Through the entire picture the characters are having a lot of fun going through their roles. Merry nonsense and wisecracks are the keynote of the film. Montgomery has been given another role of the type he had in "Tip Tide" with Norma Shearer, that of a happy-go-lucky playboy always up to some mischief. Gable is the Gable of "It Happened One Night" and who could wish for more. Joan Crawford does one of her best performances in an almost entirely comedy part.

The final scene, showing Montgomery rushing to the pier, only to reach it in time to see the liner pulling away, very aptly describes the entire production. He turns to his valet and angrily insists that he do some-

NORBLAD CALLED AS WITNESS FOR HIGH BROTHERS

A. W. Norblad of Astoria, Oregon, former governor of Oregon, has been subpoenaed by the defense as a witness in the case of the state against George W. High and his brother Robert (Babe) High, of Ashland, charged with "setting a fire, with the intent to injure the insurer." Norblad, an attorney, has for years occupied a high position in the political affairs of Oregon.

Trial of the High brothers is scheduled to start next Monday in circuit court before Judge H. D. Norton. George High formerly lived in Clatsop county and was acquainted with Norblad.

An order granting the defense the right to subpoena Norblad was issued last Monday.

The state had previously been granted the right to subpoena a witness from Marysville, Calif.

The High brothers are charged in the indictment returned against them last October, with setting fire, on the evening of January 4, 1933, to the barn on the Balfour, Guthrie tract east of Ashland. The barn, one of the largest in southern Oregon was insured for $15,000. The blaze was visible from a large portion of the valley. In a civil suit in federal court a verdict was awarded the High's.

The High brothers are now at liberty on bonds. They belong to a well known Jackson county family.

"The Last Gentleman," starring George Arliss, opened yesterday at the Studio theater, and proved perhaps the most delightful and certainly the most unusual comedy the talkies have produced.

This whimsical comedy is, by virtue of its very contrast, a fitting successor to "The House of Rothschild."

As Cabot Barr, a wealthy, irascible, family-proud old New Englander, who calls together his relatives in the vague hope of finding a worthy heir, Arliss offers another of his rich and perfect portraits.
