The Smudge Pot

By Arthur Perry

Newspaper photographs of feminine beauties, scantily attired, parading the sun-kissed California and Florida beachhes, are now competing with pictures of men, who went swimming in ice-caked Midwest rivers and lakes on New Year's Day. In many instances, the male contempt for pneumonia is further stressed, by hugging a cake of ice, while standing up to their middles. It is the concensus of opinion if the men don't know any better, it serves them right.

There are 12,000,000 horses and 800,000 mules in the land, according to the Department of Agriculture reports, "awaiting return to farm work, but they are out-aged." An effort will be made to rehabilitate them. This may mean that by the spring of 1936, the vendors of flivver invigorators, will then be on the vacant lots selling spavin cures.

People should be allowed to make money during a war, but they shouldn't be allowed to keep it.—(Statement by Bernard M. Baruch). "LORD OF CREATION" ITEM
(Red Bluff, Calif., News)

A modern miracle took place this morning. Two hours before our regular rising time the sweet young thing next door was up and went out to get her car. It wouldn't start and my husband leaped out of bed, jumped into his clothes and hastened out and started the car for her. I could hardly believe he was the same man who lies abed so long every morning and can't be persuaded to get up.—(G. G.)

An Epoch Making Pact

AN example of preventing war, not by preaching the beauties of universal peace, but by using common sense, can be found in the recent agreement between Italy and France. In fact this Laval-Mussolini pact, signed in Rome, promises to be the most important diplomatic achievement in Europe, since Locarno.

Instead of talking about the virtues of peace and the horrors of war the Italian dictator and the foreign minister of France, talked sense, and got to work on the important business of eliminating the causes of war.

The agreement provides for three things. First, maintaining the integrity and independence of Austria; second putting an end to international intrigue and political agitation in the Little Entente (outlawing the practice of one little nation meddling with the internal affairs of another); and third, allowing Italy a free hand for expansion and colonization in northern Africa.

• • • • •

THE last item is by far the most important. For as long as France and Italy were at loggerheads in the Mediterranean all talk about peace in Central Europe was futile.

Italy is overcrowded, and short of raw materials, particularly iron and coal. In northern Africa she could find room, markets, and increased trade. As long as France disputed her expansion in this direction, as a threat to her own African possessions, Italy was bound to oppose France diplomatically on the continent.

And as long as Italy opposed France on the continent, Mussolini was forced to play the game with Germany and what is left of Austria-Hungary.

Therefore the war-like spirit in Central Europe was constantly stimulated, for with Italy as an ally, Hitler might risk a war of revenge; without the hope of Italian assistance, any such military adventure would be suicidal.

• • • •

BY the terms of this new agreement of course, Germany again is isolated. Italy gets what she wants in northern Africa. France gets what she wants in Europe.

However if the plebiscite in the Saar is carried out peacefully and the recent Franco-German agreement regarding the Saar mines, is amicably fulfilled we see no reason why for the first time since the Treaty of Versailles, the countries of Europe, can't get down to business, forget their ancient grudges, bury their racial hatreds and enjoy a warless interlude, for at least another decade.

This may be a somewhat optimistic prediction. But at least this Franco-Italian pact, gives the best promise of a lasting peace in Europe, since Stressemann and Briand shook hands and smoked the pipe of peace in Locarno.

Why Not Japan?

IT seems to us, that in this Franco-Italian pact, there is a very important lesson for the United States, as far as the Japanese problem is concerned.

This country is being fairly flooded at the present time with books pointing out the menace of Japan to peace in the Far East. War there seems to be regarded as inevitable. And most students of the problem appear agreed, that in case of war the United States would inevitably be drawn in.

• • • •

WHAT does Japan want? Well Japan wants what Italy has wanted,—more room, more raw materials, more markets of her own. Japan is more overcrowded than Italy—far more—in a territory about the size of Texas she has to find room for between 65 and 70 million people. She has some raw materials but she needs more. Most of her needs can be found in those districts of China, where she now maintains a semi-military control.

Why not ALLOW Japan to expand in this direction just as France has allowed Italy to expand in northern Africa?

• • • •

THERE is ample precedent for this. The United States once "expanded" at the expense of Mexico. Alaska once belonged to Russia. This country purchased this rich territory outright from the Czar.

Why couldn't there be some international agreement, whereby Japan could purchase territory in China, and have it as her own? The cost would be but an infinitesimal part of what a war of conquest would cost her. And this is totally disregarding what such a war might cost the rest of the world.

• • • •

PREACHING the beauties of peace to Japan will do no good. Depicting the wickedness of war will profit nothing. If Japan can't get the room she needs to survive as a strong and growing nation, by PEACEFUL means; she will get it by WAR. And who will point at her the finger of scorn and say that any other world power, faced by a similar national situation, would bow meekly to its fate, and be demoted unresistingly to a third-rate power?

In other words, why can't reason and common sense prevail? Japan's demands for more territory, we regard as perfectly legitimate ones. It is foolish and cheap chauvinism to maintain that because Japan wishes to expand she also wishes to conquer the United States and dominate the western world.

Japan wants her place in the East, and her possessions not thousands of miles away, but near home.

Isn't it possible to allow her, without another great war, to HAVE them?

• • • • •

AT least such a solution of the problem, appears to us, as worthy the most serious consideration. We see no reason why what France and Italy have done on a small scale, CAN'T be done on a larger one!

GRAND JURY WILL PROBE BEER CASE

W. L. Stewart, storekeeper of the Elk creek district, charged with the sale of intoxicating liquor to a minor, has been ordered bound over to await action of the grand jury, by Justice of the Peace William H. Coleman [illegible] following a preliminary hearing [illegible] and the case [illegible] held in abeyance since [illegible] to await receipt of a birth certificate of the complaining witness.

Stewart allegedly sold beer to a CCC worker, assigned to a nearby camp. The youth represented himself to be 21 years of age, when making the purchase, and later testified that he was 19 years old.

The defense showed by witnesses that the same brand of beer as allegedly sold by Stewart was for sale in the CCC cantonment, which is under the federal regulation permitting the sale of 3.2 per cent beer. Under Oregon law, this is forbidden to minors, which also holds that a minor misstating his age is the excuse for the other.

Next grand jury session in this county is scheduled in February.

COOKS, QUACKS AND MERCHANTS ARE NOT NUTRITION AUTHORITIES.

Spinal curvature, high hip, low shoulder, round back, weak ankles, flat feet, night blindness, dry eyes, obesity, decayed teeth, knock-knee, physical staleness, premature graying of the hair, myocarditis, anemia, chronic arthritis, multiple neuritis, functional impairments of the reproductive organs, rigid brittle nails, finical appetite, voracious appetite—these are frequently manifestations of nutritional deficiency. I could extend the list to a frightful length were it fair to include mention of the many vague disturbances of the health which we know are often due wholly to hypovitaminous diet—that is, food which supplies insufficient vitamins for the requirements of eutrophy, perfect nutrition, top condition, buoyant health. I prefer not to suggest such symptoms.

The entities I have mentioned will illustrate the importance of nutrition. And right here let me remind you, Mr. and Mrs. Wiseacre, that neither the best cooks nor the brightest young saleswomen nor the most expert dietitians nor the most famous "food specialists" are competent to advise what any invalid or near-invalid should or should not eat. Indeed, many cases of the various conditions enumerated have been brought about or aggravated by the popular practice of following the advice of unqualified persons in the matter of diet, particularly in children.

The wiseacre mother of a 10-year-old child who had pronated feet (weak ankles, the potential or first stage of flat feet) took the child first to a "foot specialist" clerk and permitted this charlatan to fit some kind of trick shoe. The trouble grew worse. Then the moronic parent had the child's spine adjusted by a fad healer whose promises were rosy, but whose performance proved disappointing. Next she afflicted the unfortunate youngster with arch props—on a line of reasoning similar to that which formerly caused misguided mothers to encase young daughters in freak corsets which the wise saleswoman said were quite necessary to "mould" the figure. At last, only by accident, the child came under the notice of a physician, just a plodding old family practitioner, but one who was well abreast of the progress of his profession. He put a stop to the hocus-pocus and saw that the child received a suitable diet, including an optimal ration of vitamins, and in a few weeks the foot trouble was cured.

Sometimes I think it is unfortunate that victims of this nutritional defect—pronated or potential flat feet—do not suffer more "rheumatic" or "neuralgic" pains and lame back or feel run down, anemic or nervously exhausted, for even the dumb ones with these symptoms are likely to take it into their heads to obtain medical advice.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Hiccough

Husband had hiccoughs incessantly for five days. The doctor was unable to help him. I put two teaspoonfuls of flaxseeds (sometimes called linseed) in a jar and filled it with hot water. When it cooled enough he drank it, and did not have another hiccough. (Mrs. J. J. H.)

Answer—Anyway it is harmless enough. Inhalations of carbon dioxid are the best emergency remedy for hiccoughs I know. Let the sufferer hold a paper bag snugly over nose and mouth and breathe into it and rebreathe the air from it for a minute or two.

Fish and Milk

Impression that fish and milk or even canned salmon and milk at same meal poison. How, then, can cooks prepared creamed fish or how can they fry fish in cream? (Mrs. J. J. A.)

Answer—There is no ground for the quaint notion that fish and milk at the same meal will prove poisonous or in any way injurious. If one likes such a combination it is perfectly wholesome.

The Charcoal Bimbo

What is lacking in the diet of a 1½-year old boy that makes him try to eat such things as charcoal and soft stone? (Mrs. W. G. L.)

Answer—Eating "dirt" or other things than food is not an indication of any deficiency in the diet. Many babies have this habit, called "pica," and they get over it in a year or two, and no harm done, as long as they don't eat polluted things.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—In the manner of Arnold Bennett's journal: Dean Cornwell told me today he gained 25 pounds after quitting cigarettes. And I hear young Jack Howard has left Indianapolis for a Washington post. Palaver over breakfast coffee as to what writer turned out most stuff.

Arthur Brisbane and Lowell Thomas were selections. But the late Edgar Wallace was likely most prolific of all. He knew the London underworld better than any person of his time. Jack Lait, who also knows life's seamy side, is high up in the list of those producing prodigious copy.

After several days of slogging, I turned out a magazine piece in one hour, 40 minutes. Argued with myself it was goodish and won. At the bureau de tabac, whither I acquire current reading, the proprietor told me he looked at nothing in the papers save Ripley. Damp, clasping, cold.

A lady down Charleston, S. C. way writes the Mason-Dixon line separates those who say "you all" from those who say "hadn't ought." Ina Claire, so coolly glacial looking, seems constantly headlined in a torrid love affair. Dreiser invites me for an evening soon to "sit, sip and talk about things."

M. and I were engrossed by three smartly dressed white-haired ladies at a Schrafft's, smoking goldtipped cigarettes chain fashion. Not one inhaled but blew precise smoke rings and discussed Mae West and Harry Richman. All left without tipping. The new dog came to battle with the established one today, fur flew and both are in seclusion licking sores. A draw, I should say. Gene Crawley tried to lure me from my devoirs with extravaganzas for a new Mickey Mouse, but by sheer clench of will remained at my typewriter. We were saddened by the tragedy of Mary Harriman Rumsey, whose teas were so delightful in Paris.

A publisher's agent was here with a whip stitch electric with literary buzz-fuzz. High lights: Rex Beach has stirred up a hornets' nest by good natured prodding of expensive medicos. They are most sensitive of all professions to criticism. All publishers are angling for another book from Elsie Robinson. The short, short story is in big demand in the feuilletons and most difficult of all fiction to write. As I remember, the most absorbing I ever read were by Ryley Cooper and Octavus Roy Cohen.

Liquor affects those not used to it strangely. Dick Bettin was telling of a devoted husband who at midnight is seeing downed two side-cars before catching his suburban train. All at once he began to sob, "I just remember," he choked, "I've forgotten to take my wifeday a birth present." But my favorite tipsy tale is the old one Wilton Lackeye so often repeated. The weaving husband tip-toeing in at 2 a. m. In the hall he upset the gold-fish bowl with a crash. His wife at head of stairs: "What was that" He mumbled: "I'll teach those dern gold-fish to snap at me!"

Earl Carroll was a cicerone for a back stage siesta at a Bowery burlesque. Ladies of ensemble giggly self-conscious but not brazen. The strip girl from Denver, a waitress. With an O. Henry sort of twist to her story. Supports two children and a husband in a high-country sanitarium. We sent out for hamburgers all around. The only good hamburgers are those "sent out for." Will Hays set off with his son Bill the other day to hunt cougar with that fellow that lassoes them in the movies. High up in the Rockies somewhere, I believe.

I think it was Meredith Nicholson who counseled me to read Marcel Proust as one who could garland the inconsequential and make it exciting. Proust was a neurasthenic who wound up in a sound-deadened, air fouled room. All neurotics have astonishing flair for minutae. Vide: Wells, Bennett, Walpole. I am drawing away from Wells. His Marxist strain has become too brilliantly ruby, the same carmine streak that runs through a group of high-brow magazines, particularly the American Mercury since Mencken left.

A hideous etching of life under a span of Brooklyn Bridge the other midnight. Around a rubbish fire a pot au feu brewing. Silhouetted in the half glow a legless beggar, an enormously headed hunchback and shriveled crone whose claw-like hands held a cigar stump. Adele R. became swimmy and fainty. Hardboiled K. L. wept. We hurried away. Why should such things be?

Comment on the Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS

PRESIDENT Roosevelt tells congress that if it passes the soldiers' bonus bill it must also levy new taxes to PAY IT.

WHETHER you are for the bonus or against it, you must agree that this is true. If the government is to contract big bills, it must levy taxes with which to pay them.

Otherwise it must start the printing presses, and every nation so far that has started in to pay its bills with printing press money has gone broke.

LEVYING taxes with which to pay government's bills, especially when the bills are vast in size, is PAINFUL. From time to time, governments seek to ease this pain by paying their bills with printing press money.

This process is called inflation.

TAKING inflation to ease the pain of taxation is exactly like taking morphine to ease bodily pain. Increasingly bigger doses are required to get the desired result, until in time the taker is destroyed.

YOU read in the papers these days of the Saar plebiscite. These are big words and perhaps you may be hazy as to their meaning.

"Plebiscite" is a journalist's word for what a plain, working newspaper man would call an election. The Saar plebiscite means that on January 13 the Saar basin, which was taken away from Germany by the Versailles treaty, will hold an election to decide whether it will stay with France or go back to Germany.

The Saar basin is rich in coal and iron, so both sides want it badly.

BEING a plain, more or less straight-thinking American, living in a country where common sense still has a certain value, you may be inclined to ask:

"What difference does it make WHO owns the Saar? If France wants the Saar's iron and coal, why can't she BUY them, just as we buy what we want from Canada? Why can't Germany do likewise?

You miss the whole point. It isn't just the coal and iron of the Saar that France and Germany want. It is CONTROL of these products in time of war that they are after.

It is self-sufficiency in time of war that France and Germany are thinking of, and war and common sense have little in common.

You will not find it among the published figures of the natural resources board, but the board has a definite breakdown on its ten-year program expenditures as follows: Federal public works 3.5 billions; state public works 9.7 billions; city public works 7.6 billions; county public works 300 millions and low-cost housing 500 millions. It makes 21.5 billion dollars in all. Of course, the federal government would have to lend most if not all of the money because the states, counties and cities are in extremely bad financial condition generally.

Some people grumbled because the president did not mention the 18 or 19 millions on relief, but grouped them as five million heads of families. The five million figure is correct, and from the New Deal standpoint it sounds better. The accepted method is to figure one head of a family for every four persons on relief.

The only big point which failed to draw applause as Mr. Roosevelt read his message the other day was the line that care of the one and one-half million permanently unemployed is a local responsibility.

There is no question about the spiritual recovery around Washington. Night clubs are springing up as thickly as in New York, although this never was a night-life town before. Waiters raise their noses at anything less than a quarter tip and personal services are getting slipshod again. All of which are unmistkable signs of returning prosperity.
