CULINARY CRAFT....

Know Your Electric Refrigerator

Do you know your electric refrigerator? Now, just after Christmas, there are many housewives just becoming acquainted with new electric refrigerators. They are finding that there are characteristics quite personal about their new helpers and that it will pay them materially to study these little mannerisms so as to be able to enjoy all the advantages of electric refrigeration with a minimum of effort and maximum of results.

First you will want to know something of how cold to keep your machine. The location in your home will have a lot to do with the setting, so a definite rule of number is not practical to give you. However, the food in the cabinet itself (not the freezing compartment) should be kept at about 45 degrees Fahrenheit, or so that it will keep in good condition almost indefinitely but not freeze in that place. When the cabinet is kept like that, the freezing compartment will be just right for regular use. For "fast freezing" one sets the control according to the method used in each particular machine. (Some models have a compartment which, without resetting, will freeze exceptionally fast.) After the need for exceptional speed in freezing is over, set the control back to a normal position so that the cabinet will not become too cold and, perhaps, freeze material which should not be frozen.

When you are going to use milk or butter for cake making, take them out of the cabinet in time to reach room temperature before you will need to use them. Very cold milk will separate the butter and sugar which you have "creamed," so, for that reason, warm milk (or a little hot water added to the cold milk) will be much more satisfactory. Of course, very cold butter is hard to manipulate and melted butter is not always as good to use as softened butter which creams nicely.

Defrosting is another problem. This frost gathers faster in a machine which is opened often and when the door is left open for some time. Uncovered foods also tend to make the machine frost faster. The machine will absorb the moisture in an effort to keep the cabinet cold and dry. When the freezing compartment has collected from one-fourth to half an inch of ice, or the surface becomes glazed, it is time to defrost. A machine that is heavily frosted is less efficient than one with a thin coat of frost. The ice may become an insulation against which the machine works to effect the desired condition in the cabinet. You may use the "overnight" method, turning the machine "off" and set hot water in the freezing pans and defrost quickly. Then there are "automatic" defrosters which the name describes quite well. Do not use an ice pick to break ice from the machine in any place. You may puncture or break some part which will cause considerable trouble and expense to replace.

Food should be covered to prevent loss of moisture. Clear glass, oiled paper or a dish which identifies certain foods are all satisfactory covers. Cover most lightly. Do not overlook keeping the covers on milk bottles. Vegetables should be cleaned so as to be ready to serve and take up as little room as possible in the dish they are stored in.

Quantity buying is, of course, one of the great savings effected by your refrigerator. Buy well, cook well, store well, and you will bless the day that brought the refrigerator into your home! In this connection, evaporated milk may be prepared (or some brands are prepared) so that chilling only is necessary to make them whip into thickened condition suitable for any "whipped cream use."

Do not crowd the shelves. A circulation of air in the cabinet is essential for efficient refrigeration. Watch that there is a little space between articles and at the sides of the cabinet. Gelatin dishes do not need to be placed in the freezing compartment. They will "set" beautifully and quickly in the cabinet. Of course, gelatin is often added to ice cream and ices to hasten the freezing and make a smooth texture. Such dishes are frozen in the usual manner.

Cleaning.—This should be done by washing with very warm water to which a little soda has been added. Scald the racks and trays thoroughly. Usually the machine should be cleaned after each defrosting and otherwise according to your own judgment. Wash the outside of the machine with soap and water and do not let it become stained by foodstuffs remaining on it for any length of time. A thin coat of furniture wax may be applied to some cabinets for protection to their finish.
