Does Work At U. O.

Amos Burg, young Oregon explorer who has achieved world fame for his daring expeditions, has just returned home after a year spent at "the bottom of the world" below Cape Horn, the southernmost tip of South America. There he explored a group of storm bound islands, photographing the natives and gathering material for the National Geographic magazine. He always returns to the University of Oregon to do his writing and research on his trips. During his student days he studied journalism at the university. He will leave for the East shortly, where he will lecture under the auspices of the National Geographic Society in Washington, D. C.

ARTIST OBTAINS FLANNEL UNDIES OF BYGONE DAYS

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Jan. 10.—(AP)—Two months of urgent appeal through newspaper advertisements and personal letters today rewarded Grant Wood, Iowa's leading contemporary artist, with a suit of genuine red flannel underwear of the good old-fashioned, scratchy, fireman-red variety.

As a result the intimacies of the Saturday night bath, as it was taken in 1880, will now be transferred to canvas and preserved for posterity by the Iowa artist.

In possession of the old flannels, Wood will this week start his painting of "The Bath: 1880," which threatened for a time to be just another good idea wasted for lack of an authentic copy of the once popular undergarment.

The red flannels were obtained from a Minneapolis family, strangers to the artist, who explained they were just received from Boston relatives who were moving to Georgia and decided such articles of clothing would serve a better purpose in the Minnesota northlands.

"You have no idea how near being a museum piece this type of undergarment has become," Wood commented. "The disappearing buffalo has nothing on red flannels."

Until arrival of his Minneapolis contribution, Wood received many volunteer offers of aid but nothing tangible to fit his need or properly drape the Cedar Rapids man he has chosen for his subject.

VETS' STATE AID LARGEST DEALER IN REAL ESTATE

SALEM, Jan. 10 —(AP)— From a loan organization at its inception in 1921, the World war veterans state aid commission has developed into one of the largest real estate operators in the state, Jerrold Owen, secretary, informed the legislature in his biennial report released here today.

"No department of the state government has seen more complete and revolutionary a change in its functions and administrative problems in the past few years," the report stated. "For this condition, the depression, which has dumped nearly $4,500,000 worth of real property into the lap of the state is chiefly responsible."

Sales activities of the commission have resulted in the disposal of 380 properties, of which 186 were farm properties. The report stated the state had invested in these properties $957,413. The sales price received showed a profit of nearly four per cent on the state's investment.

Still under ownership by the state are 1,529 properties of which most are city residences, the report showed. In these the state has invested $3,538,826.

"From the present trend of the realty market the commission has reason to believe that it will be able to liquidate all the property it has acquired without any unreasonable loss to the state," Owen pointed out.

CENTRAL POINT LOAN ASSOCIATION ELECTS OFFICERS, DIRECTORS

Stockholding members of the Central Point farm loan association held their annual meeting at Central Point January 8 and elected the following directors and officers: President, J. W. Birkholz; vice-president, W. H. Norcross; secretary-treasurer, Warren Patterson.

Directors elected were: J. W. Birkholz, W. H. Norcross, J. E. Hesselgrave, H. Ranstrom and Warren Patterson.

The Central Point association is the local co-operative unit through which farmers obtain federal land bank loans. It was organized in 1916 and since then has handled approximately $121,100 in loans for its members in this territory.

Each land bank borrower purchases stock in his local farm loan association at the rate of $5 for each $100 borrowed, as additional collateral to his loan. The association in turn purchases stock in the Federal Land bank of Spokane for an equal amount. As a further co-operative feature involving mutual responsibility, the association endorses and becomes liable for each of its loans. It therefore is necessary for the association to conduct its affairs in a sound, prudent way, exercising care in making original appraisals and keeping the loans of its members in good standing.

Since passage of the emergency farm mortgage act in May, 1933, enabling the land bank to greatly enlarge its services, the association has handled approximately 22 loans for $80,500, Secretary-Treasurer Warren Patterson, reports. Also, Mr. Patterson, acting as agent for the land bank commissioner, has closed approximtely 31 loans for $65,300.
