Unusual Theme In Craterian's Film With Miss Colbert

By Dick Applegate

"Imitation of Life," which opened at the Craterian last night, is an unat the Craterian last night, is an unusual picture in every detail. Surring Claudette Colbert and Warren William, the main theme, or at least the principal one among several, being the racial problem, in which two children, one white and one colored, are raised side by side, going to school together until they are old enough to realize the color barrier.

As the colored girl (who looks white) grows older, she begins to hate her mother, a loving old soul who is black. Around this situation is the main theme built.

The secondary theme, which is almost as absorbing, deals with the
