Little Shirley Temple Heads Craterian Cast

Shirley Temple, the dimpled little favorite of millions of American showgoers, has a perfect role in "Bright Eyes" starting a four-day engagement at the Craterian theater today. With the story especially written from a real life happening for the little star, Shirley is shown in heart-warming and dramatic story as the mascot of an airplane, where every flyer is her daddy after her own crashes to earth. James Dunn heads the supporting cast.

College Film Now Heading Bill For Rialto Audiences

If you've ever gone to college—or if you've never gone—you are certain to thrill to the screen story of carefree youth which opened yesterday at the Rialto theater.

"Bachelor of Arts" is the title of this outstanding production—yes, it is adapted from the famous John Erskine novel of the same title—and it is the most honest and "debanked" film of college life within the memory of this reviewer.

Perhaps its greatest quality is its sense of humor. That, of course, stems directly from its author, the man who wrote "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" and "Galahad," and who is even more famed as a humorist than he is as a college professor at Columbia.

Tom Brown and Anita Louise are seen in the two most important roles—the young campus sweethearts who meet the problems of an adult world in an adult way and not by shouting "rah-rah-rah!"
