Stars in Craterian's New Hit

After having made two smash hits in a row—"Lady for a Day" and "It Happened One Night"—the genius of Director Frank Capra is again brought to the fore with his new picture, "Broadway Bill," opening today at the Craterian theater, with Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy in the leading roles. Like the others, this new Capra film play has been having a smashing success everywhere it has been shown—with holdovers the rule instead of the exception.

The story is a simple one, but with Capra's manner of telling it, a thoroughly entertaining one throughout. With that intangible Capra quality, evasive, fleeting—yet paradoxically something definite that brings out the greatness in the players and story alike, "Broadway Bill" is a superb successor to "It Happened One Night."

Baxter is the young man married into a rich family who dominates the industry of a small town, yet always with the desire of "getting away from it all" and going to the race tracks he knows and loves, and finally doing so, which leads to some highly exciting situations.

Myrna Loy is the younger sister of Baxter's wife, and the only member of the family who really understands him.

SCREEN REVIEW

By Dick Applegate

A thrilling mystery story, "The White Cockatoo," with Ricardo Cortez and Jean Muir, with color, suspense and a perfect setting, played in conjunction with the vaudeville at the Craterian theater last night.

Set in a large hotel on the coast of France, the play moves swiftly to its final denouement with very few flaws.

The love interest centers in Jean Muir, as a young American girl who is about to inherit 2 million dollars, and Ricardo Cortez, a young American who spends most of the picture preventing people of various descriptions from swindling her out of it.

The mystery interest centers in the attempts on Miss Muir's life, and the murders of two of the hotel employees, and the clever solving of the murders by Cortez.

Most mystery plays content themselves with a few weird sound effects, and the use of disembodied hands with long finger-nails, clutching from behind curtains at the beautiful damsel's throat, and flashes of some guy in a black cape sinking off through the underbrush.

No such amateurish maneuvers in this one, however, and the fans who enjoy a well turned mystery purred contentedly at this one.

Outstanding in the vaudeville was a bicycle riding act that would be a credit to big-time circuits. The broad seasoning of silly remarks which accompanied it was no doubt thrown in to appease the rustic appetites of we Medford yokels, but otherwise it was darn good. If I could ride a bicycle like that I could at least quit worrying about getting my new shoes shine all wet on these rainy days, if that makes any difference to you.
