

HEAVY DUTY HITS BRITISH LIQUOR EXPORT TO U. S.

Only 40 Or 50 Distilleries Operating In Scotland Compared To 133 Before War—Ask Reduce Duty.

By H. L. PERCY (United Press Staff Correspondent)

LONDON.—(UP)—Paroled American troops during 1934 were southerly by two times as much whiskey as they were during the days of prohibition, according to official British figures.

Yet distilleries in Britain, America's chief source of supply, are grumbling that their exports are down. Statistics show that in October, 1934, the latest return available, the total import of whiskey from all countries were 68,000 proof gallons. This compares with 120,000 proof gallons in August.

For the 10 months ending October the total was 3,711,834 proof gallons against 4,047,000 proof gallons for all months, including whiskey, gin, brandy, etc., in 1933.

On the United States side, the total import of whiskey alone topped the four and a half million mark. The distillers here are reluctant to give any figures to support their claims of increased exports. In 1933 they shipped practically nothing. In 1934 they sold 328,276 gallons. Their 1935 sales will not be known until official figures are available, possibly in February. There is little doubt there will be a profit in 1935.

The distillers also claim that the depression has reduced the industry's production. They are pointing to the big annual trade of pre-prohibition and pre-war days. The industry produced and shipped just over a million gallons of whiskey to the United States in 1914.

They point out that only 50 distilleries are operating in Scotland now, compared with 133 before the war. The plant of the barley growers, particularly the Scottish ones, is extreme.

The reason for it all is the particularly heavy duty of 118 on every proof gallon, compared with 87.75 before the war.

The trade for several years has petitioned the government to reduce the duty. The industry has been protesting this week with the district meeting which will begin Thursday evening.

Evangelist Hayward will remain over next Sunday and will bring the message each week including Saturday night.

Pater Rev. E. N. Long and people are taking a high school course in the campaign.

The subject for tonight will be "The Second Coming of Christ."
