THERE are two ways to cut food costs. One is to buy lower grades of foods—the other and better, to buy the kind you like—yet pay a low price.

Tomorrow we feature the better foods—the brands you have used for years—at prices that cut your food expenses—yet give you the best.

You want to save—every one should—yet you want good foods. Here are some of the many.

The supply of cattle and hogs is such that a prediction of just how high prices will go is impossible.

We shall continue, however, to furnish the kind of meat you want to eat at the lowest possible price.
