NEW FISH BATTLE IS FORECAST FOR CURRENT SESSION

SALEM, Feb. 27.—(AP)—Although the house of the Oregon legislature yesterday passed the Rogue river fishing measure, and previously had refused to eliminate traps and seines from the lower Columbia river, the fish war in the session was not over.

Today a new bill was introduced in the lower branch of the assembly which virtually renews the battle over traps and seines. The new bill would eliminate fish traps in all of the Columbia river and both traps and seines in portions around Sand Island in the lower Columbia.

The measure was introduced by Representative Walter Norblad, who led the unsuccessful fight last week for elimination of all traps and seines. The latter bill had already passed the senate and lost by several votes in the house.

For years one of the greatest controversial issues in the legislature and several times appearing on the ballot, the closing of the Rogue river in southern Oregon to commercial fishing was passed by the house late yesterday with but two dissenting votes.

Approximately 2500 people who voted in 1932 in this county failed to do so for two years thereafter, and in order to cast a ballot at the next election will have to re-register.

Death claimed some of the registrants but the great majority have moved to other states, returned to their home counties, or failed to manifest enough interest to go to the polls.

In the 1932 general election, the people were stirred by presidential, national, and county issues, and 19,872 voters registered—an all-time and phenomenal record for this county.
