PIANO PRODIGY VISITS MEDFORD

Ruth Slenczynski, child prodigy and her father, who is her tour manager, passed through Medford Friday morning on her way to San Francisco on a ship of the United Air Lines. The short interview which was possible while the plane was being serviced revealed the fact that Ruth, for all of her musical ability, has the same simple charm of other little girls, except, perhaps, for the fact that as a mental genius she is outstanding.

Many little girls play the piano, it is true, but very few of them as Ruth does. She is only ten years old, and has been playing the piano for seven and a half years. When she was but two and a half years of age, and was out walking with her father in Berkeley, California, she heard a piano being played and demanded one. Father had no money to buy the infant piano, so he took her instead to a piano store and boosted her onto a stool before an instrument. In a few moments she located various chords and intervals and practiced them vigorously until her father dragged her away.

After that there was no rest until Ruth had a piano and in seven weeks was playing Bach. Now she gives concerts to the astonishment of learned critics.

When Ruth sailed for the United States from her home in Paris early this year she had with her a $75,000 guarantee of 30 concerts. This is striking evidence of the astounding sensation she has created.

During the present concert tour, the Washington, D. C. critics proclaimed her as surpassing in actual musical genius the great Beethoven himself, and so overwhelming were the press notices that her father, upon reading them, was emotionally overcome.

Little Ruth, however, may be a genius and beyond all rules and advice; her father is not and is puzzled by the exceptional talent of his small daughter. As all thoughtful parents are puzzled by the characteristics, good or bad, that develop in their children.

During a conversation with Ruth's father, in the all too brief time spent here, the following little story was related by him. Ruth was being interviewed over the radio last Thursday, in the studios of KOMO, Seattle, in an impromptu manner, and among other questions asked her by the studio director, who appealing to a child's "Fairy Tale" imagination, propounded a question in the following manner: "Ruth, if you were given an Aladdin's lamp to rub, and have one wish of any kind gratified, what would you most desire of anything in the world?"

Quick as a flash without any hesitation, came the spontaneous reply, "A Baldwin piano." Ruth, who was standing near by, heard her father relating this story, and interrupted him, at this point in the conversation, by clapping her hands in childish enthusiasm and saying "Yes, and I meant it, too."

Chinese Reds Target

CHIAN TSEH, Hsuan Province, China, March 2—(AP)—Reliable reports reaching here from Taying today stated the Nationalist government's forces launched a heavy attack upon red troops in that area, apparently attempting to exterminate a group of communists holding forth there.

Recreation and community facilities will be another phase. Through actual improvement of streams, swimming and fishing will be made more desirable, and increased numbers of game animals will be brought about through scientific research.

There has been a tendency of owners of timber lands to cut timber too rapidly. Mr. Buck said, causing danger to public values in the future. If kept up, this procedure will force the timber industry out of existence in Oregon as it has in many other states, Mr. Buck said.

He said a sustained yield for timber areas will be brought about thru a different system in taxation of private timber ownership assistance to private owners through government loans and federal and state acquisition of timber lands.

"Call It Luck" at Studio

Judging from advance reports, film fans are in for a hilarious time when "Call It Luck" opens today at the Studio theater. The presence of Herbert Mundin and Georgia Caine in the cast is sufficient guarantee of that.

It's a diverting story of a London caddy who wins a fortune in the sweepstakes and then comes over to America with his charming niece to spend it.

As the niece, "Pat" Paterson has an opportunity to sing in a night club when her creditulous uncle loses his bankroll. And romance comes into the story when Charles Starrett comes to Miss Paterson's rescue.

BUCK MAPS NEED FOR DEVELOPMENT OF ROGUE FOREST

Development of the natural resources of Rogue River national forest on a sustained yield basis was outlined by C. J. Buck of Portland, regional forester, in a conference Saturday with Karl Janouch, local supervisor. Having recently conducted a meeting of forest supervisors at Eugene, Mr. Buck visited the local office yesterday enroute to eastern Oregon.

Discussing work in the forest under the national CCC expansion program and related responsibilities that the forest service may have under the PWA appropriation, Mr. Buck pointed out many avenues along which Rogue River national forest will be developed.

He referred to timber as the resource needing most careful development in Rogue River national forest, which is intimately connected with the economic interests of the counties it includes.

Mr. Buck pointed out that the local forest has very high timber, water, recreation, and fish and game values, as well as a difficult fire prevention problem. He said that a national forest does not ordinarily rank so high in all forest values.

Having found while on a tour of the east that the Civilian Conservation Corps is believed to fill a need that has never before been filled, Mr. Buck said that through its ranks of young men every conceivable forest use will be developed. This, he said, will include roadwork, which in Rogue River national forest is already 75 per cent complete.

The regional forester expects an increase in the number of CCC camps within Rogue River national forest in the immediate future and a corresponding increase in work projects during the summer. Fire and water shed protection will be two important phases of the development program.

Transportation of heavier loads will be used as one of the many methods in which water-shed protection will be brought about, Mr. Buck said. He explained that these animals have a tremendous value in water conservation.

Recreation and community facilities will be another phase. Through actual improvement of streams, swimming and fishing will be made more desirable, and increased numbers of game animals will be brought about through scientific research.
