NEW YORK DAY BY DAY By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, March 2.-So many wandering pollen of the heights, drifts of trivia, lodge in a fellow's mind while shaving, flicker a second and shimmer away. No one remembers an hour afterward what he has been thinking. His thoughts are razored off with his beard.

Out of the children, 20 minutes later, I rushed just for fun to the typewriter to set down what I could remember. It's all topsy-turvy stuff, phantasmagoria. But it's about the only time a busy person rides the broomstick.

Here's a real bit. That blind coccote dancing in the rue de la Chapelle. What a grand actress Ika Lassa is. That night at the Garden when a top mounting circus acrobat stopped to scratch his ear. A match seller along the Strand with a love bird on each shoulder. The first rattailed stooge.

If Heywood Brown grows any bigger he'll burst. First choice among the lighter shows: "Personal Appearance." It's hard to believe the Mongolian looking Warner Oland is a Svede. He's a real find. From the heels during a tense moment of an Ethel Barrymore first night. Mrs. Vincent Astor's dignity.

In That Perfect State, I imagine, every man will have a full hour at least for tonorial devota. Instead of a quick scrape and bleeding chin, shaving should be the most leisurely of rites-the interlude when man is the true lord and master with the household on tiptoe. I have always shot the works for shaving accessories. It's the only extravagance of a Scot who steams off the uncanceled stubs.

One of the New York high-hand-shake finishing schools is turning out an irritating type of exhibitionist. The girl whose voice is an upper-toned monotone drags. So patently affected and such a sour imitation of Hope Williams it becomes a shooting pain in the neck. If we had a daughter who came home for vacation talking like that, we'd not only yank her out but burn down the school house.

It is bruited about in publishing circles that Gene Fowler's next biographical bling will be a revealing record of the Rabelian Wilson Mizner. Fowler has already dissected Tammen and Bonfils, William J. Fallon and Mack Bennett, but Mizner will likely offer more of Fowler's kind of fodder. The Yerkes-Mizner wedding, even told by a straight man, is the most exaggerated slice of human comedy in American history. A true Hoyt farce, with trimmings.

Everybody seems to like the president's new con-in-law, John Boettiger. He is winning the same friends here he won as a crack correspondent in Washington. And as an ally in the Hays office he is expected to bring much of the experience of his trained journalistic beginning. Twenty years ago C. D. Gibson would have grabbed him, if possible, for one of his handsome profiled heroes who look equally at home in the riding silks or evening dress. You remember-the Mr. Pipp series.

Recently I reversed an established routine by going to bed at 9 p. m. and rising at 7 a. m. I enjoyed the novelty, after several nights of wakefulness. But in two weeks I was aiding the bedtime ahead an hour nightly until I reached the accustomed schedule. The old dog yapping at new tricks. My conviction is now permanent that the gloomiest stretch of daylight is from 8 until 11 a. m. And there are no hours so stimulating as those between 8 p. m. and midnight. The next most stimulating are between 3 a. m. and the first flush of dawn. Dawn is the romantic time to float off to dreamland. There is wine in the air, a tremulous wonder in the skies, the glad chirrup of birds and everywhere the spirit of lurking adventure. It should be the most gracious hour, too, to slip through the veil separating our world from what everybody hopes is a better one.

Edna Ferber's newest book "Come and Get It," a rugged romance of Wisconsin logging, is a whiz, as is any book from her pen. She is one of the few novelists whose characters inspire a reader to exclaim: "That's the way people really talk!" And where is a pater description than her "a Paris Herald Countess"?

There's a little throat catch in a letter that came special delivery today. It is from a bleak town in the Dakotas. The writer, a girl of 17, wonders with divine naivete if she could make her way in New York "stinging to unhappy people." Always, she says, she is bursting with song. (Copyright, 1935, McNaughton Syndicate.)

BATHING POOL OUTLET TRAPS DROWNS YOUTH STOCKTON, Cal., March 2-(AP)-Sucked into the outlet of the Olympic Baths here last night and trapped by the water pressure, Bobby Cope, aged 10, drowned before life guards could free his body.
