Famous Stars Head Cast of Newspaper Film at Craterian

Speed, action and romance are the high points of "After Office Hours," playing at the Craterian theater.

A fast-moving story of adventurous romance, it deals with a society murder mystery against a background of modern-day newspaper life.

Two famous stars, never teamed before, share honors. They are Clark Gable and Constance Bennett, who are slated to go a long way as a team.

Indications are that they will follow in the footsteps of the famous Crawford-Gable combinations, so popular with fans.

In this film, Gable plays a hard-boiled newspaper editor who is determined to get his story even though it requires the tactics of the Northwest Mounted.

Constance Bennett plays his beautiful society reporter and romantic nemesis.

When the editor, out to "break" a threatening scandal, runs into a cold-blooded murder, excitement begins. Unlike most murder mysteries, the audience knows who is the murderer, then, enjoys watching the mystery unraveled by a trained newspaper investigator.

The co-stars enjoy the support of a brilliant featured cast, which includes Stuart Erwin as Gable's uncomprehending photographer, and Billie Burke as Miss Bennett's socialite mother.

Following the announcement of Clark Gable having been awarded the prize for best performance of last year, one naturally expects quite a good deal from this popular star, and he is said to live his part in this new picture will add further prestige to his already well-studied crown of acting laurels.

George Raft Stars in Rialto Picture

George Raft and Carole Lombard, the sensational dancing stars of "Bolero," repeat that early success on an even more startling scale in Paramount's "Rumba," which opened at the Rialto theater yesterday.

An enthralling and dramatic love story to the rhythmic tom-toms of Cuba's fascinating dance rhythms, the picture combines musical innovations, drama and handsomely mounted photography to furnish spell-binding entertainment.

The story, itself, is concerned with Raft, a Broadway hooper exiled to Havana by threats of gang vengeance, who jumps into the limelight with his revival of Rumba dancing. Assisted by Margo, the lovely Mexican dancer, he becomes the town's chief attraction.

He meets Carole Lombard, a lovely heiress, and falls madly, tempestuously in love with her. Soon, she reciprocates his feelings, but they argue and she flies to New York.

Raft accepts an offer to star in a New York show, although he knows he is daring death, for the opportunity to be near the girl he loves. The film comes to a climax when, as a result of threats, his dancing partner refuses to go on in their dance. Carole Lombard comes to his aid. In a final burst of barbaric music, this pair dances a thrilling Rumba, which brings the film to a close.

BARRETT'S OF WIMPOLE STREET NOW AT ROXY

In "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," starring Norma Shearer, now playing at the Roxy theater, Producer Irving Thalberg and Director Sidney Franklin have worked hand in hand and achieved the finest filmization of a famous stage piece ever to be recorded in celluloid.

For "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" is a brilliant production—brilliantly conceived, written, acted, directed and framed. Norma Shearer and Fredric March do more than present a tender, poetic love story; they actually bring the invalid Elizabeth Barrett and the poet Robert Browning to life.

3-SHELL LIMIT ON WILDFOWLERS GUN IS FEDERAL RULE

Repeating Shotguns Curbed As Conservation Move — Sportsmen Themselves in Appeal for Regulation

The long-looked-for reduction in the killing capacity of magazine shotguns has at last been realized.

President Roosevelt has approved an amendment to federal hunting regulations that places a three-shell limit on auto-loading and other repeating shotguns, the Bureau of Biological Survey announced today. This reform in wildfowl long advocated by sportsmen and conservationists was made urgent by the alarming decrease in the number of ducks.

The regulation, which becomes effective immediately applies to auto-loading or hand-operated repeating shotguns used in hunting ducks, geese and other migratory game birds. Users of these types of weapon are required to have the magazines stocked with plugs that cannot be removed in the field, or must have the magazines cut down to the required shell capacity.

Repairs necessary to bring guns within the provisions of the new regulation, it is pointed out, will cost little and arms companies, having in mind the interest of sportsmen now in possession of such guns, have agreed to co-operate in this conservation measure.

The new amendment, recommended by the Biological Survey, adopted by the secretary of agriculture, and approved by the president on February 2, in accordance with the migratory bird treaty act of 1918, provides that migratory game birds may not be taken "with or by means of any automatic-loading or hand-operated repeating shotgun capable of holding more than three shells the magazine of which has not been cut off, or plugged with a one-piece metal or wooden filler incapable of removal through the loading end thereof, so as to reduce the capacity of said gun to not more than three shells at one loading."

Meets Widespread Demand This regulation, said Secretary Wallace in forwarding the amendment to the president, will be of "incalculable advantage in the preservation of our migratory waterfowl." The secretary pointed out that the measure "will deprive no one of the privilege of hunting such birds and will meet an exceedingly widespread demand throughout the country."

The demand for the action, it was said, was insistent and pretty generally made even by the sportsmen themselves, and was unanimously favored by conservationists.

J. N. Darling ("Ding"), biological survey chief, hailed the amendment as an outstanding conservation act. "Pressure from all quarters," he explained, "has become exceedingly great during the last few years as the annual toll of the hunters, plus the natural causes, have threatened with extermination some of our most choice species among the migratory waterfowl and reduced to the danger point nearly all the varieties of ducks and geese popularly sought by the hunters."

Multiple Shots Decrease Game The advent of the repeating shotgun, the biological survey relates, came at about the same time as the rapid decrease in migratory birds, to which it contributed, but for which it was not totally responsible. The rapid development in the efficiency of all arms and munitions and the invasion of game-breeding areas by civilization, together with the increase in the number of hunters have thus brought the American sportsman and the conservationist to the realization that if wildfowl shooting is to be preserved it must be as a skilled sport and not in mass killing.

It early became apparent, says the bureau, that the abuses of multiple-shell guns far exceeded the advantages to the true sportsman. Magazine shotguns holding five or six shells at a loading, contributed both to careless marksmanship and to excessive destruction of birds. The large-gauge guns had been ruled out, but in their place, through man's ingenuity, had come an even more deadly killing device.
