

PRIVATE INDUSTRY TAKING MANY OFF RELIEF IN OREGON

Decrease of 8443 Individuals Seen in Two-Year Period — White Collar Class Doing Much Better

PORTLAND, March 7.—(AP)—The SERA headquarters here today reached the conclusion that private industry is making inroads on the relief rolls of Oregon and that employment is on the upgrade. Figures compiled by the state emergency relief administration show that thousands have left the rolls to take jobs.

On February 1, last, there were 39,991 families on the relief rolls in Oregon, all receiving some form of aid, either directly or through the work relief program. This represented 136,953 persons.

Two years ago the number of families on relief totaled 43,659, representing 145,396 persons.

Within the two-year period, then, the relief rolls have shown a decrease of 8443 individuals.

Reports reaching the relief committee of the construction program which is getting under way throughout the state show that many men long on relief, now are being employed in private construction jobs.

The white collar class, so-called, also is less largely represented on the relief rolls.

The relief committee today approved an additional $42,000 worth of projects. These included school work at Wheeler, held drilling in Umatilla county, sewer work at Lane county farm, school work at Delight Valley, Lane county, and park and sewer work in Coquille.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP)—The federal relief population today reached a record high of 22,375,000 as Harry L. Hopkins pushed efforts to increase contributions from states and communities.

Relief administration officials estimated that 5,400,000 families averaging 4 to a family, and 775,000 single persons were on relief.

Grants for the first 15 days of March, including special activities except rural rehabilitation for the entire month, totaled $62,818,411 for 42 states, not including unannounced funds for Delaware, New York, Illinois, Minnesota, New Mexico, and Vermont.

Running at a cost of $5,000,000 a day, the relief administration obtained $80,000,000 for March by transfer of PWA funds. Secretary Ickes said recently he expected the total of $175,000,000 he has advanced for relief to be repaid from the $4,880,000,000 work relief bill.
