Richard Arlen in Rialto Picture

James Cruze, whose flair for outdoor spectacle has been exemplified in such pictures as "The Covered Wagon," and many other later pictures, once again gives a colorful outdoor story to the screen.

"Heldorado," playing today and Monday at the Rialto theater, is a narrative that for originality, drama and color is exactly the sort of film in which Cruze glories, and succeeds in making thoroughly interesting.

Cruze, who has a particular flair for stories with an epic sweep, apparently has found "Heldorado" much to his liking, for he has turned out a big picture—wide in scope, sympathetic in characterizations, free and driving and colorful in the flow of its narrative.

Myna Loy, William Powell Together Again

In their third appearance as a team, Myna Loy and William Powell appear as husband and wife in "Evelyn Prentice," which opens at the Roxy today. Powell again is seen in the role of a lawyer, a role in which he excels, and Miss Loy is his erring wife who becomes involved in a murder scandal.

Richard Arlen and Madge Evans play the young adventurer and the heiress with outstanding skill and prominent in their support are such important players as Ralph Bellamy, James Gleason, Henry B. Walthall.

Margaret Sullivan Craterian Star

Of all the times the story of Cinderella has been told on the screen, nobody has ever thought of unblushingly admitting that the yarn is Cinderella, nor has anyone ever thought of embellishing the tale with any humor, much less of a blustery, lusty nature.

Starting a three-day run at the Craterian theater today, Margaret Sullivan, with Herbert Marshall, Frank Morgan and Reginald Owen, romps through a delightful and botcherous comedy, "The Good Fairy," in which Cinderella finally comes into her own.

Miss Sullivan, admonished to do at least one good deed each day as she is released from an orphanage to become a theater usherette, is so thrilled by life that she tries it. First, Owen, a waiter, smuggles her into a lavish ball in a hotel where she meets Frank Morgan. Placed in a delicate position, she tells Morgan she is married and he, wishing to help, demands to know who her husband is. She picks a name out of the phone book, and Marshall, who belongs to the name, becomes Morgan's European attorney, not quite realizing how it all came about. One complication runs into another and imbued with the idea of herself being a good fairy watching over Marshall, the picture romps through to some of the most hilarious screen moments of the season.
