

AIRPLANE SEANCE BRINGS VOICES OF FAMOUS PERSONS

Conan Doyle, Amundsen and Greeley Speak in Eerie Tones As Ship Flies in Darkness Above New York

By MAX HILL
Associated Press Staff Writer
NEW YORK, March 22.—(AP) Eerie voices of undetermined origin, waiting through the inky blackness of a darkened cabin plane as it soared 4000 feet above New York, gave spiritualists a topic of paramount interest today.

The voices identified themselves as belonging to the spirits of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, creator of Sherlock Holmes and a firm disciple of spiritualists; Ronald Amundsen, explorer; Horace Greeley, crusading newspaper editor of a past era, and Lincoln Beachey and Floyd Bennett, aviators.

Avoided Interference
Attempted for the first time so far as the participants knew, the airplane seance took place last night through efforts of a group of New York spiritualists to overcome "interference." The interference, they explained, sometimes handicaps their attempts to contact the spirit world.

Fourteen spiritualists were in the plane, from which all light had been shut off by newspapers tacked across the windows. After the liner was in the air, Miss Maina Tafe, the medium, suggested "Everybody sing." All did.

Voice in Trumpet
Soon an earthly and thin voice (the source as yet undetermined) came from one of the two aluminum trumpets in the aisle. It said it was Sir Arthur, and described the experience of talking with persons in an airplane as "more fantastic than death itself."

"Floyd Bennett" was heard as the plane roared over the Bronx in a port named in his honor. The next voice, ascribed to Lincoln Beachey, said the spirit of Wilbur Wright was standing beside him.

Arthur Ford, a friend of the late Sir Arthur, said after the seance he was sure "that was Sir Arthur's voice."

The voice which claimed to be that of Amundsen came through without much trace of accent, although Amundsen's voice was marked by his early years in Norway.

Tells of Death
This voice, in answer to a question, told how Amundsen met death on a rescue flight in the Arctic, a tragedy still unexplained by history.

"We became lost in the fog over trackless wastes of ice," intoned the weird vice. "It was just as well that I went when I did. My work was done. I have been down with Byrd in Little America, watching over him."

John Goldstrom, spokesman for the spiritualists, termed the venture a "complete success."

VOCATIONAL TALK AT 20-30 MEET

The first of a series of vocational talks was given at the weekly dinner meeting of 20-30 club at Hotel Medford last night by Del Cox of the Toggery.

His subject was the growth of the clothing industry, which he described interestingly showing the influence of customs on the sale of clothing.

Final plans were made at the meeting for the first annual 20-30 club dance, which will be held tomorrow night at St. Mark's Guild hall. This dance is to be held each year in the future.

There was a good attendance at the meeting. Guests were Linn Massey, Orville (Shorty) Wilson, Wilbur Tucker, and George Henselman, member of Rotary club, who attended in an advisory capacity.

GIRLS TO PUBLISH HI-TIMES APRIL 4

Preparations are underway at Senior high school for the publication of the annual Girls' league edition of Hi-Times, which will be published Thursday, April 4, as a feature of Girls' league week. The paper will be distributed following the tea which is to be given in the afternoon.

Features of the edition will be stories on activities of the league during the year, and several special columns. Among these will be style columns on both clothing and hair-dressing, featuring Easter clothes. A beauty hint column will be included, as will columns in arts and etiquette for both boys and girls.

Special editorials will be written, and the paper will include a large sport section on spring football and tennis.

Mignon Philippe, associate editor on the regular Hi-Times staff, will edit the edition. Other members of the staff will be the same, except for the feature editors.
