Personal Health Service

By William Brady, M.D. Signed letters pertaining to personal health and hygiene not to disease diagnosis or treatment will be answered by Dr. Brady if a stamped self-addressed envelope is enclosed.

TREATMENT OF LEAD POISONING.

When acute symptoms are present it is now considered better to favor deposit of the lead in the bones, and for this purpose a high calcium diet is given.

Besides a diet rich in calcium, a calcium salt, either the lactate of the chloride or calcium gluconate, is generally given as medicine.

Habitual use of hair dyes or alleged "color restorers" containing lead, or flake white or other cosmetics containing lead, or drinking water or an alcoholic beverage which has been carried through lead pipe or even through rubber hose containing lead, has accounted for some puzzling cases of chronic lead poisoning.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

I don't like meat, neither does my husband. Can you suggest substitutes? So far we have used eggs, dates, figs, nuts, lentils, etc., and don't notice the change.

Answer:—All kinds of cheese, beans, peas, milk, fish, shell fish. If the diet includes eggs and some fresh milk or cheese, it doesn't matter if you exclude meat altogether.

Is it true that drinking milk and eating potatoes increases the blood count? Am I a fat and quite fat chaser?

Answer:—How vague you are! Psychologists declare that a third sex is evolving at present, and sometimes it seems so. But here is the fourth sex—the indeterminate sex.

Comment on the Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS

WAR talk dominates the headlines. Italy's under-secretary of war announces that fighting between Italy and Abyssinia may begin any time, and adds that by the end of April Italy will have more than 800,000 men under arms.

FRANCE is rushing reinforcements of colonial troops to the German frontier, professing to be seriously alarmed by German's plans to rearm herself.

MEANWHILE, Bernard M. Baruch, under secret fire in Washington as a war profiteer, warns us solemnly that if another world war breaks out, "the institution of free government, as we know it, would fall; standards of living would go so low that it would go into another Middle Ages."

ANOTHER aide issue in the news: Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff, of Soviet Russia, is said to have proposed the formation of a new far Eastern "pact" to include the United States, Great Britain, Russia, Japan, China and France.

IF THIS important individual had the job of answering that proposal, his answer would be something like this: "Go as far as you like with pacts and leagues and conferences among yourselves to keep the peace in Europe and Asia, but LEAVE US OUT. We'll keep the peace within our own borders, and start no ruckuses with any of you."

WHY is the world so full of war talk these days? Are we really standing on the brink of another world war?

Or are people just talking about war because there isn't much else worth while to talk about?

Pick your own answer.

Ye Poet's Corner

At Eventide One Sunday evening as the sun went down In a sea of gold, purple and brown, And I stood looking far, far away, At the summit of some hills across the bay, I was thrilled with the beauty of the scene, That lay before me like a picture on a screen.

I could but marvel at the sight, Which told of the coming of another night, Yet seemed to promise in God's own way, That after a little rest there would be another day.

For mingling with the deepening shadows of night, The moon was trying to keep things bright.

And as I stood enraptured with the glory, Of God's own way of telling his story, Of how such sights were for the enjoyment of all, If only we would tarry in spring, summer and fall, To look at his promises so beautiful and clear, Painted in the sky to bring us good cheer.

So let us tarry for a moment each day, To look at the sunset across life's bay, And note the wonderful beauty and glory, That has been the theme for many a story, And we will arise with our eyes on the sky, And never again be afraid to die.

For God will fill our hearts with love, By his painted promises of a home above, If only we will tarry a moment each day, To thank him in our humble way, For the many things so beautiful and gay, That can be seen at sunset across life's bay.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, April 3.—Memories: Sunning the milk crocks. White Rose toilet water. The sloping cellar door. Lamp mats. Swapping Jackknives. The barrel stove ham-mock. The "reese-vo" on the kitchen stove.

Looking glass with the comb case under it. Straw saliors with streamers in the back.

Bone-handled knives and forks. Sugar pear preserves. White horse-fly nets for Sunday. Pinky.

edged palm leaf fans. Black steeled sunbonnets. White chewing gum hearts. Wedding chivarees. The closet under the stairs. The rusty iron hat that held the front gate shut. Willow slip whistles. Walking spanish.

Pigeons on the barn rafters. The green scum on the horse trough. Squeezing the milk weed. The brass button yard measures on the dry goods counters. The salesman's safety pin holder for her blunt end scissors. Watermelon rinds in the wagon yard. Stick candy in glass jars.

Priming the pump. Dish-towels draped over the gooseberry bushes. Grinding the coffee between the knees. Opening the parlor shutters for company. The free sample counter at the drug store. Settling the table plates downward with knives and forks underneath. Red glass jelly dish with a lift-off lid.

The quince prince Mike Romanoff has become a bit tedious in the bars and cafes that once made him persona grata. He was a laugh. And his engaging presence at a table often inspired another round. But his well-combed hair began to wear thin after he was mixed up in the curish racket of film-flaming divorce testimony.

Patrons looked into bars, saw Mike there, and turned back, and proprietors called him to one side and suggested travel broadened the mind. But the Prince is used to marching orders and nothing squelches him. He'll be on deck again, never worry.

And in almost any side street of the 40's and 50's these days a pert little cafe with a Frenchified gay awning opens over night. They are financed on show-airings. Among most of backers there isn't a dime. Everybody from the building owner to the manager takes a chance. If they click it's a good gamble, if they don't there's always bankruptcy. One thing is certain—an auspicious opening. Drinks are on the house.

The revelations concerning Pulli Adlers' luxurious orgies together with the missing of her "little black book" listing wealthy visitors, illustrate again the complete passing of the Red Light district, such as once crisscrossed West 38th street. Establishments of this sort may pop up anywhere—in the exclusive apartment house or elbowing the brownstone. The smoke screen is their outward orderliness. Many have been conducted for years without slightest suspicion of respectable neighbors. It appears.

Shrewd appraisers have tried to explain the sustained popularity of the air waves' greatest hero, Rudy Vallee. The general sum-up is in his strength lies in dictation. Every word is distinct. Charles Laughton, whose pronouncements are superb, classes Vallee as nearest to articulate perfection. The accomplishment is natural. Indeed his voice culture lessons are confined to less than a dozen Vallee's only those Broadway restaurant engagements is between 6 and 7 p. m. He generally eats a light snack and then, hatless
