area, sent out 50 relief parties to set up field dressing stations. Governor General Kenji Nakagawa of Formosa announced 16,000,000 yen (about $4,500,000) in Japanese government funds was available to aid the victims of one of the worst catastrophes in modern Oriental history.

It was understood Emperor Hirohito also was to make a donation from the privy purse.

Nightmare of Terror. Recurring after-shocks combined with the outbreak of fires and the wailing of the injured and homeless converted the period following the two main quakes into a night mare of terror.

Men, women and children wandered through the debris shouting the names of lost relatives. The correspondent for the Rengo (Japanese News Agency) told of seeing long rows of injured persons lying on mats along a roadside screaming with pain.

Many Villages Razed. The destruction centered in a district approximately 40 miles in diameter, including scores of populous villages in Taichu and Shin-chiku provinces.

Especially stricken were the towns of Nalho, where 581 died, including the "head-man" (corresponding to mayor); Kamoika, with 445 killed; Taiko, where fires added to the destruction; Byoritsu, which saw a majority of its houses leveled; Kori, Chikunan and Taisaku.

The epicenter of the earthquake was near Toyohara, only six miles below the surface, accounting for the unusually heavy damage.

The entire main street of Taichu was destroyed. Intermittent rains after the quakes added to the discomforts of the homeless.

Although there are many Americans and Europeans residing in the island's larger centers, none was believed to have been among the victims of the disaster.

Wide Area Involved. Airplane surveys of the stricken area indicated the devastation extended approximately 2,000 square miles from Chichiku City on the north to Taichu City on the south.

Clearing weather after the night of rain enabled the army, navy, and Red Cross to accelerate their relief efforts.

Rescue crews turned to the grisly task of searching for additional dead in the wreckage of thousands of homes.

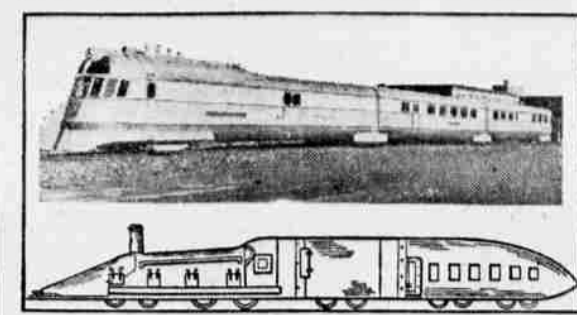

Early estimates of the damage totaled 20,000,000 yen (approximately $5,500,000). The figure was relatively small in view of the wide extent of the catastrophe.

A PATENT for a streamlined train, forerunner of the Burlington Zephyrs and others which today are establishing new records for speed and economical fuel consumption, was granted by the U. S. Patent Office to Samuel R. Calthrop, of Roxbury, Mass., in 1865.

The belief that the most profitable inventions would be those which would most completely revolutionize present day usage is one of the most common errors of ambitious but inexperienced inventors.

size pears were favored for the fresh fruit market.

Caney Official Heard. E. N. Burns, of Portland, secretary of the Northwest Caneyers association, confirmed testimony as to "liberal interpretation" of the caneyers contracts.

Earl B. Day of Gold Hill testified that the 2 1/2 size would hurt the non-irrigated land pear grower, and estimated that "in four out of five years, approximately one-third of the non-irrigated tonnage could fulfill the specification. He said, in his experience, he had found the caneyers desired the 2 1/2 size pears and that "between 80 and 90 per cent of the non-irrigated crop could meet this specification. It was brought out that approximately ten per cent of Medford district Bartlett acreage, was non-irrigated.
