

LEADERS SEEKING TO SILENCE 1936 CAMPAIGN FIRE

More Seasoned Think Drive Getting Ahead of Itself - No Definite Issues Is Policy Urged

BY BYRON PRICE. (Chief of Bureau, the Associated Press, Washington) The more seasoned politicians think the 1936 campaign is getting away ahead of itself. A slowing-up may be expected.

Society and Clubs

North For Mothers' Day Mothers Plan Trips Several from Medford will make trips to Eugene and other northern cities over the week-end to spend Mothers' day with sons or daughters at the university and at Oregon State college.

Among those planning to visit Eugene are Mrs. O. O. Arnsperger, who will visit her daughters, Mary Frances and Bertha, at the university, and Mrs. Elmer Wilson, who will also visit in that city.

At Corvallis, among the Mothers' day guests will be Mrs. W. J. Warner, who is returning from a visit in Idaho to spend the week end at Oregon State college with her daughter, Margaret.

Many From Medford Will Attend Grants Pass Meeting Members of Chester A. Arthur Relief Corps No. 34 of Medford are planning to attend the W. R. C. district convention which will convene in Grants Pass tomorrow, plans having been completed by the Medford delegation at a recent meeting.

The regional get-togethers to be held soon by the Republicans, and in lesser numbers by the Democrats will bear a note of caution. The local leaders will be advised to attempt no conclusions, especially with respect to candidates.

Advance Scheduling. The political guns have been booming so loudly during the last month or so that it would be easy to close the eyes and imagine that this is the spring of 1935, not 1936.

It will be a full year yet before the national conventions—they usually meet in June—begin to cast very definite shadows before them.

Usually this is a period when the political camps are conserving their ammunition. Just who started the shooting is not entirely clear—perhaps it was the left-wingers such as Long and Coughlin who were chiefly responsible for stirring things up.

An effort now will be made to reserve most of the rest until the opening forces can see the whites of one another's eyes.

Democrats Delay Survey. The Democratic great headquarters is not inclined to get into details regarding its delay in sending agents into the field to sound out voter sentiment.

It is easy, however, to read between the lines. The administration is about to embark on what many regard as its most ambitious experiment—expenditure of the vast war-relief fund just authorized by congress.

Of what value would a survey be, if it were made at a time when still following the democratic view—everything is about to be turned upside down?

It is expected now that the sound-out will be put into the field after the new program is in full swing, next fall or winter.

Republicans Waiting, Too. Much Republican caution is traceable to this same source.

If the opposition party identifies itself in the public mind with that school of thought which holds the work-relief plan is a dream and a delusion, and then discovers that propriety is just around the corner, after all, where will party policy get off a year hence?

Four billion dollars is a lot of money. Its handling easily could make or wreck any political party—particularly if there was too much haste in prejudging the results.

SPORT SLANTS

The largest opening day crowd in the New York Giants' history was on hand to say "Hello" to Babe Ruth when he made his New York debut in a National League uniform.

A great swelling roar boomed a royal welcome to the Babe as he stepped on the field. No mistaking the fact that the thousands were on hand to greet the big slugger.

Buried in the huge throng behind first base was an interesting little family of three—a young father, a pretty little mother and their five-year-old son, anxiously waiting for Babe Ruth to take his turn at bat.

To those in the immediate vicinity the proud father explained that he had brought his tiny son to the opening game so that the boy could get a look at the greatest home run hitter the game had produced.

He was going to make a ball player out of the boy, of course he was. Probably a pitcher or a first baseman—the lad was a southerner. Sure, the little fellow liked the game—cray as about it.

Like Dad Used to Do He came by his love for the game naturally enough—his proud papa admitted without being pressed that he was quite a ball-player in his youth. And what's more, could crash the old apple.

The little tot seemed keenly enough interested in the proceedings, at that. Perhaps the bunting, the band, the parade to the flag-pole and general excitement of opening day caught his eye.

He more or less patiently bore with his father while the latter covered the amazing career of Babe Ruth in an astonishing detail.

Finally the pre-game formalities were completed and the Giants dashed on the field with Breddy Fitzsimmons on the pitcher's mound. After disposing of the first two batters, Ubranski and Malton, the stage was set.

The big moment. The blue of sweat stepped up to the plate to take his cut and the very air seemed charged.

Their big moment had arrived. Fisher and son were to share the thrill of watching the great slugger dig in and knock one out of the park. Loudly the father drew his son close to him—pointing to the pitcher they were about to witness.

"Now son, watch the way he takes hold of this one, you'll never forget this moment as long as you live," he whispered.

Just as Fitzsimmons wound up and pitched the ball toward the plate the boy shook himself free of his father's fond embrace, turned to his mother and pleaded: "Please tell me the story of the Three Bears, Mommie." I couldn't begin to describe the expression of disappointment mingled with chagrin that clouded the poor father's face as he felt his fondest hopes plunged deep in despair.

Little did it matter to him then that the mighty Babe went out on a grounder to Bill Terry, unassisted.

A New Golf Bug

Farmers, golfers, and those who like nice lawns—take a good look at this bug. It's a chinch bug—about as bad a pest as you can expect to find.

Blissful farmers have known it as an enemy of corn and wheat. Now Cornell university announces it has taken to destroying golf greens and lawns. "Public Enemy No. 1" for greenkeepers, say the experts.

Chinch bugs suck the juice from the grass and grains. In a lawn, the first sign of damage is browning of the grass. The bugs are hard to control. Certain fungi, developing in moist weather, are their enemies. In hot, dry weather, the bugs thrive. Mature, they're about three-sixteenths of an inch long, black, with white wings folded in a Maltese cross form across their backs.

The photograph at the top is magnified many times. The spots on the golf ball show the bug's relative size.
