

RUSSIA WILL PAY DOCTORS MORE TO INCREASE NUMBER

MOSCOW — (UP) — Faced by an acute shortage of doctors to carry out its public health program, the Soviet government has decided to pay the physicians higher salaries and to make the medical field more attractive.

By a decree of the Council of People's Commissars and the Central Committee of the Communist Party, the average monthly income of doctors has been raised from about 250 to 450 rubles. This places them on the same financial plane with engineers and other professional men.

Under the new decree doctors' salaries also will vary with their experience. In the past physicians in the various categories of medicine received the same salary regardless of age and length of service in the profession. Naturally this led to dissatisfaction among the older doctors who felt it unfair that a youthful graduate of a medical school should be paid as much as a mature physician of many years experience.

Doctors employed in the extreme north or in other regions, where living is uncomfortable and hazardous will receive especially high salaries from the government.

The income that doctors receive from the government may be supplemented somewhat by fees received in private practice. However, the work required from medical men by government hospitals and institutions leaves them little time to treat those wealthier patients able to pay for personal visits.

At this time there are in Russia proper some 44,000 physicians as compared with 13,000 in 1913, the year before the World War. Some 70,000 students are now enrolled in medical universities. Despite the growth of the profession, there is still an acute shortage of physicians—far less than the Soviet government needs to carry out its public health program which is bringing medical aid to remote communities which in past years had few if any doctors and hospitals.

FLORIDA TURNS FROM TOURISTS TO FROGS

WAUCHULA, Fla.—(UP)—With the tourist crop, and the winter vegetable and strawberry crops having been harvested, this section is preparing now to harvest another crop—of frogs.

This town is the county seat of Hardee County, considered the center of the wild frog industry. As many as 40 barrels of froglegs have been shipped from here in a single week. The best output for a month was 103 barrels.

Reports indicate that an unusually dry season has cut down on the supply of "hoppers," but there will be plenty to attract the hunters and make it worth their while at a time when they are not otherwise engaged.

Hunters are paid cash for the frogs and prices usually range from 10 to 15 cents a pound, gross.

LOST RADIUM LOCATED BY HOMEMADE RADIO

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—(UP)—A homemade radio device led to discovery of radium valued at $3,000, in an ashen at a local hospital.

Local insurance company officials, informed by hospital attendants that a $3,000 tube of radium had been lost, summoned Arthur Omberg, 25, radio operator.

Omberg constructed his device and proceeded to the hospital. He was unable to adjust the instrument when he reached the hospital. The indicator spun crazily. Omberg had stopped near some ash cans. He sifted the ashes and found the radium.

10-YEAR TRIAL PROVES FRIENDS WERE WRONG

BELMONT, Mass.—(UP)—Friends told John C. Fohn, Boston manufacturer, that flowers wouldn't grow if he built his conservatory on the north side of his home here.

That was 10 years ago. Today everything from lemon trees to cactus plants thrive in his "north side" conservatory, and he is famed in this section as a grower of fine flowers.

Though his golf score is usually in the lower 80s, he doesn't play much nowadays, preferring to devote his time to his other hobby.

Bossy Is Cross-Eyed
DAVIS, Cal.—(UP)—Visitors to the University of California experimental dairy at the College of Agriculture here rub their eyes when they see one placid bossy. She is perfectly cross-eyed. Those who watch her for a few minutes as she chews her cud take a quick run for a mirror to see if they are cross-eyed, too.

IMPROPER USE OF LAND IS BLAMED FOR SOIL BLOWING

NORMAN, Okla.—(UP)—Dust storms which cover the midwestern states are caused by improper use of land, according to Dr. Paul B. Sears, professor of botany at the University of Oklahoma.

"The situation frankly is a cause for alarm. Farmers in this area must take their choice of starvation or proper utilization of land," Dr. Sears said.

Stripping the uplands of vegetation by plowing and by excessive grazing during the last decade has made the dust storms almost inevitable, Dr. Sears said.

"The pressing need at present is to keep the upland country covered at all times with some kind of vegetation, and drop this dream of cultivation of row crops everywhere."

Nature's process of forming a spongy, water-holding top soil required centuries and in many regions this top soil has been almost entirely destroyed by wind and rain aggravated by plowing and overloading the grazing lands, Dr. Sears explained.

"In Caddo County, in western Oklahoma, as much soil has been removed by the combined action of wind and water in the past 40 years as in the 1,000 years preceding the settlement of the country. This situation is duplicated elsewhere."

Dr. Sears explained that the top soil, which varies from two to four feet in depth, is easily removed after the land has been plowed or after the grass has been cut short by grazing. Underneath, he added, is the hard sub soil which will absorb very little rain.

These dust storms are especially violent in the spring because the land has then been cleared of vegetation in preparation for planting.

Much of the dust which occasionally blankets Oklahoma and other states is from the lava deposits in Wyoming, Dr. Sears said. One crater near Laramie, Wyo., is 10 miles long, one and one-half miles wide, and approximately 150 feet deep. There are several craters in the bottom. Dr. Sears cited this as an extreme case of the power of the wind to remove the soil.

180 in Air, Fined for 50
CLEVELAND — (UP) — Wharton Larned, who, as a commercial airline passenger pilot, drives planes 180 miles an hour and faster, was fined $10 and costs in police court here for driving his automobile 50 miles per hour.
