

ENEMY'S KISS

Alison Redd, stilled and something stronger is hurried to see that the calculating Daphne Summers, her father's second wife-to-be is trying to make Mr. Redd's suspicions of Guy. Whereas all the young man has done to date has been to save Alison from a nasty situation which was of Daphne's making, and he has like the perfect gentleman throughout.

Chapter 20 MAN BEMUSED

"GUY was looking at the house, father," said Alison. "He'd come down to see it and wanted to look at it again."

She frowned at her father's slightly sceptical face and tapped impatiently with her foot. "Oh, I know it sounds queer, his staying and everything, but it wasn't. If you'd been there you'd have done just the same!"

Robert frowned. "I don't know that I'm particularly pleased about his staying there with you all night," he began, but the girl cut in fiercely.

"You wouldn't have minded—not one bit—until she started interfering!"

"Alison!"

"I know, father! But there are limits! Just because she doesn't like me's no reason why she should barge into my affairs! It's no business of hers. I'm grown up now and surely I can make friends if I like without asking her?"

Robert put out a hand and drew his daughter towards him. "Now, my dear, listen."

"I don't want to listen! I think it's horrible! Just because a man helps me when I'm in a jam, she has to think—to make you think—"

Alison broke down; the strain of days of anxiety, of her night's vigil in the old house and today's distress, all gathered into that one cloud-burst of tears. Because she seldom cried, because he had never seen her so upset, Robert was almost shocked. He gathered her into his arms, soothing her with pet names and kisses until her last sob subsided.

"I'm sorry," she wrenched herself free, dried her face.

"There, you're overfired, that's all." Like all men, Robert Redd attributed any feminine emotion to physical causes. "But you mustn't think, my pet, that Daphne doesn't like you, Alison, and was a little hurt because you didn't seem to like her."

"She means so much to me, I can't bear to think that you and she won't get on. Poor little thing, she had such an awful time—fancy, she was married at fifteen to a perfect brute years older than she was who treated her most abominably."

"Lots of women would have left him, but Daphne stuck to him, even when he got ill, and nursed him herself through the two years that he was ill. And then, when he died, she found that he'd gambled everything he'd got away and left her absolutely penniless! I tell you, when I think of him, I see red! If only I can give her a little happiness!"

Suddenly, impulsively, Alison turned and kissed him.

"I'm sorry, dear!" That was true; she was sorry for her outburst. "I won't again. I expect we'll get on splendidly when we know each other. It was piggy of me to be upset... only, well, I love you so, and I felt—"

"Jealous, of course. It's natural. Children do." Robert was not conscious of quoting. "But you needn't be. I want you both; and she wants both of us, particularly you. By the way, I've got something for you—1 meant at first to give you a check for fifty pounds and then I thought you'd rather have this."

HE felt in his pocket, drew out a jewel case. Alison took it. Inside, on a dark blue velvet lining, lay a turquoise and diamond pendant. A pretty little pendant.

"I got Daphne to choose it for you while we were in Nice. I thought she could pick one better than I could, she's got such good taste. It's a 'welcome home' present."

"It's just lovely! Thank you so much, darling. Thank her too for me." Not for worlds at that moment would Alison have said aloud what was in her heart—that she would rather have had a present at half the price chosen by her father himself.

She put it round her neck, fastening the tiny platinum chain and looked at herself in the glass. "It's just perfect, isn't it?"

NORMAL SCHOOL SUMMER SESSION STARTS JUNE 10

Work Planned for Those Seeking Educational and Professional Self-Improvement—Special Course

ASHLAND, June 5.—(Sp.)—The 12-week summer session opens at Southern Oregon Normal here, June 10. The session will be divided into two equal terms, the work complete in each term.

President Walter Bedford announces that the work offered during this 1935 summer session at the Normal has been carefully planned for those who are completing their work for graduation, for those who wish to take regular courses for educational and professional self-improvement, and for those who wish to take a two weeks' special course for educational and professional self-improvement, and, at the same time, earn sufficient credits to satisfy the reading circle requirement of Oregon.

In addition to regular courses, there will be offered a number of special courses which will be of value to teachers in service. A course in the teaching of geography and social sciences in primary and intermediate grades will be offered by Mrs.

York of the Colorado State Teachers' college at Greeley, who she specialized in this field of study for her master of arts degree.

The Dramatic Workshop under the direction of A. L. Bowmer, is another course of special interest to teachers who wish to better prepare themselves for dramatic work in the respective schools and communities. Special courses in music will be offered for those interested in this work and wish to improve themselves in it. Special courses in both physical education for men and women will be offered for those who are interested in the new movement in physical education in Oregon.

During the first six weeks of the summer session, Mrs. Jesse Sewer, who has just completed her work for the master of arts degree at Teachers' college, Columbia University, will conduct an observation room at the Lincoln Training school. This room will be open to observers at all times during the session. Rural teachers will be particularly interested in this work because the teaching situation will be as nearly as possible that of the rural school, and the methods used will be those that have been tested by leading educators at Teachers' college.

In addition to the work outlined above, there will be special work in penmanship, under the direction of a specialist in this field. Tennis and swimming for women will be given under direction of an instructor trained and experienced in this work.

LINDBERGH WITHDRAWS FROM TWA MANAGEMENT

WILMINGTON, Del., June 5.—(AP)—Henry B. DuPont, chairman of the board of Transcontinental-Western Airlines, said today Col. Charles A. Lindbergh has withdrawn "for a time at least" from active part in TWA management as technical adviser.

DuPont said Lindbergh's decision disclosed two months ago at the board was "due to personal affairs and a desire on his part to be away from New York a great deal."

THE BUNGLER FAMILY—Welcome Home!

Home! Ha, after what I've been through, even trudging up these steep stairs is a treat.

I hear music, laughs. As usual, when we expect a good night's rest, some of the neighbors are throwing a party. Hear it?

Yes, someone is raising a hullabaloo, but even that is better than the big gobs of silence we got on that dippy island.

Tell me! I'll warn whoever is throwing that party to—

Listen.

Why, George, the noise is coming from our flat. Give me the key so I can—

The key... let me see where did I put it?

Here's someone opening the door.

Oh hello! Just one moment, please.

Oh Ollie! Here's some more folks to join your party! Oh Ollie! Yoo hoo! Ollie!

NEW FARM MORTGAGE MORATORIUM SOUGHT

WASHINGTON, June 5.—(AP)—A revised farm mortgage moratorium bill designed to circumvent supreme court invalidation of the Francis-Loeche measure was introduced today by Representative Lemke.

As explained by the author it provides for a three instead of a five-year moratorium on farm mortgages and permits a farmer to retain possession of his property by paying a rental value fixed by the court.
