EARWIG PLAGUE RETURNS AFTER WINTER LAYOFF

With vast numbers of earwigs emerging from their winter sleep under ground, Medford citizens plagued with the insects are interested in the method of eradication employed in the city of Portland, through their bureau of insect control under the direction of E. G. Gavin.

About 10 years ago the Rose City was overrun with the pests, and poisons, traps, bantam chickens and other measures were tried with but indifferent success. Then the Technid fly, a parasitic insect not unlike the common housefly in appearance, was imported from Europe, the original haunt of the earwig, and provided the most effective relief to the harassed city.

The Technid fly is the natural enemy of the earwig. Possessing remarkable powers of anaesthesia, the fly paralyzes the earwig and lays approximately 250 eggs in the soft part of the pest's body. In only 30 seconds, the eggs hatch out into tiny maggots, which eat away the inside of the host's body. In 30 days the work is completed, and the earwig is dead. The maggot then goes into the cocoon stage, and remains until the next year, when in the spring it in turn hatches into a Technid fly, completing the life cycle.

No particular effect is seen the first year, according to Mrs. Gavin, who with her son Pat, was a Medford visitor this week, but in a few years the pests will have nearly all vanished. If the fly cannot lay its eggs in the body of an earwig, it in turn will die, and there is an end to the Technid, unlike the effect produced with other parasitic insects such as beetles, which sometimes become almost as troublesome as the earwigs before them.

In places such as Medford, where there are few Technid flies, the next best way of getting rid of the pests is by using bantam chickens. This at best is a snap-hazard method, but that the earwig work at night.

Hemila Wins Prize In Quaker Contest Craterian Theater

Kino Hemila, advertising manager for George Hunt & Company theater of this city, has received a $25 cash award from the Quaker Oats company for his promotion campaign for James Cagney's picture, "Devil Dogs of the Air," which showed at the Craterian theater last March. The Quaker Oats company offered an advertising tie-in with this picture and theaters throughout the country participated in the competition which included theater displays and newspaper advertising and publicity. The Craterian theater was one of five theaters on the Pacific coast to receive recognition in the contest.

L. E. Modestit, representative for the Quaker Oats company in this section of the northwest, personally presented a check from the Quaker Oats company to Mr. Hemila here Saturday.

Perhaps the most colorful period of American history followed immediately after the Civil war. With the entire country in chaotic condition, the battle-scarred veterans of the struggle for freedom found it practically impossible to obtain work of any kind.

On the western frontier, which was then situated in the lowlands of southeastern Indiana, a rude civilization had been established by a group of uneducated, biased and unprogressive delinquents. The lives and social conditions of this scattered population have been vividly described in such famous novels as "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," "Girl of the Limberlost" and "The Circuit Rider."

Edward Eggleston, who brought a new dialect into literature in "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," achieved his greatest distinction due to his inexorable fidelity to fact as he saw it. The studio officials insisted upon as faithful a reproduction of early frontier life as Eggleston himself portrayed. Consequently, lovers of Mr. Eggleston's novels will be pleased to

PLAY AT VALLEY SCHOOL PLEASURES

Closing exercises at the Valley school were conducted Friday with drama, music and art students participating in an amusing French skit and a colorful, festive Japanese operetta, O Cho San, presented with beautiful music.

All children in the school participated in the French skit, with Julie Carpenter as the lazy father learning to play golf, especially entertaining Nancy Day, Barbara Jean Schuler and Jean Wing also carried leading parts.

Books presented from the school during the program went to graduates Julie Carpenter and Nancy Day. Writing certificates were awarded the following by Mrs. Naomi H. Van Dyke, principal: Harlow Carpenter, Harriet Hart, Charles Brasley, Nina Tuttle, Susan Vilas, Mary Lou Lysman, Jean Schuler, Jean Wing, Nancy Day and Julie Carpenter.

Announcement was made that Miss Mary Foster will have charge of the school next year and that it will be limited to the kindergarten and first and second grades. Talks were given by Mrs. A. S. V. Carpenter and Mrs. VanDyke.

A delightful luncheon was served, with Mrs. A. S. V. Carpenter in charge of the arrangements. The parents were served under the play shelter, and the children all had picnic luncheon on the lawn.

"Bright Eys" Opens at Rialto

An exclusive return showing of America's brightest little star, brings Shirley Temple in "Bright Eyes" to the Rialto theater for today and Monday only.

With James Dunn heading the supporting cast, Shirley romps through many adventures as the pet of a big commercial airport, and, when her mother joins her father in the Great Beyond, Jimmy, the little star's own particular favorite pilot, takes Shirley high in the heavens to tell her about her loss. It makes an ideal vehicle for the curly-haired favorite of millions.

learn that "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" comes to the Craterian theater for a run of three days, starting today.

"The Hoosier Schoolmaster" pictures the experiences of an Indiana youth, made homeless by the ravages of the Civil war, who secured a position as teacher of a back-country district school. Though inexperienced, the young man is plucky, proving himself possessed of qualities which command the respect of hitherto incorrigible pupils.

Norman Foster, Charlotte Henry, Sara Padden, Otis Harlan and Russell Simpson are a few of the featured players.

Henry Clay Reynolds of Hagerstown, Md., recently took his first airplane ride at the age of 97 at Miami, Fla.

"Wiggs' Brood" On Roxy Screen Today

Pauline Lord, celebrated American star, makes her screen debut in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" at the Roxy theater for today and Monday.

The film, which has preserved all the homely, lovable philosophy of the novel and play, also has W. C. Fields, ZaSu Pitts, Evelyn Venable and Kent Taylor in the principal roles.
