

ENEMY'S KISS

SYNOPSIS: Daphne Sumers, about to marry Robert Reede, tells Robert's daughter, Alison, that the Guy Western she loves is really a shady physician, Dr. Lumley. Alison is convinced that Daphne is an adventuress, and has a proof! She is telling Guy of the proof when she accidentally learns that he really is Dr. Lumley. Alison, stunned, consents to accompany her father and stepmother to a remote place in the Pyrenees after their marriage.

Chapter 31 GUY AGAIN

DAPHNE dived on her plans for the honeymoon, "I know the man who runs the place and he told me that there are wonderful climbs, and I thought we'd picnic and Alison and I could explore them while you played with your plants, Bob."

"I'm not sure that I'll come," Robert winked at his daughter. "You haven't said 'thank you' yet!"

"I've done something much better," retorted Daphne. "I've made you four wotty chocolates you love!"

"Ah!" Robert was rather overacting his part, rubbing his hands together, smiling at Alison. "I tell you, Daphne's home-made chocolates are something to write home about!"

"You're not going to get one yet!" Daphne was arch now. "Wait!" She turned to Alison. "One can't get decent chocolates out in Spain, off the beaten track. Do tell me, what kind do you like best? I must make you some. Or do you love nuts, too?"

"She loves creams," put in Robert. "Then I'll make a whole box of creams, especially for her," declared Daphne affectionately, "as a present."

Alison had an odd sensation of suffocation, as if the too apparent and transparent efforts to placate and include her were huge soft edgewoods which were being pushed down on her until she could hardly breathe.

She made an attempt to smile and speak lightly. "It's I who must think of presents. I must think of one to give to you, Mrs. Sumers."

"Daphne, please!"

"Sorry, Daphne. What would you like?"

"I'm sure I should love anything you chose." She got up, held out her arm, linked it in the girl's and drew her out of the dining room. "You've your father's taste, my dear, which is wonderful. Look what he gave me today—these lovely pearl earrings!"

"They are awfully pretty!" The girl tried hard to reciprocate the warmth the elder woman showed, but the touch on her arm gave her a physical repulsion that she had never felt with anyone else. "As if she was a snake," thought Alison.

ENTERING the library, she drew away as she said, "I'm afraid I couldn't afford anything as beautiful as that."

Daphne broke into a ringing peal of laughter.

"Afford! You dear, innocent child! Don't you know that with your expectations you could get credit in any shop in London?"

"No, I never run bills."

"Why should you?" Daphne made that sound mocking. "My dear, how I wish that we were all like you!"

Alison turned away. She was feeling furiously angry again. Not so easy, after all, to keep one's temper with Daphne, who was always sneering covertly, making each attempt to be friendly into occasion for fresh digs and mocking laughter. The only

FIREMAN AN ARTIST DUE TO DEPRESSION

BOSTON.—(UP)—The depression has made an artist out of Joseph Sharples, who was a stationary fireman until he lost his job 18 months ago.

Unable to find work, he turned his leisure time to painting, a hobby since boyhood. Now he is a member of the Boston Business Men's Art Club, and critics have commended some of his water colors.

PIONEER HOLDS HOPE OF RECOVERING SIGHT

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah.—(UP)—After 19 years of blindness, Utah's oldest pioneer is hoping to regain his sight. Robert Sweeten, 94, who is convalescing from an optical operation, is looking forward to the Pioneer celebration this summer with the hope of seeing it, instead of witnessing it through another's eyes as has been his custom.

PATIENTS WATCH FILMS WHILE DENTIST AT WORK

LIMA, O.—(UP)—To make painless dentistry more painless, an enterprising dentist here is utilizing motion pictures.

A screen has been installed in the office of Dr. M. W. Adams and while he uses the forceps and drill, an assistant projects moving pictures to distract the mind of the chair occupant. There are special comedy films for boys and girls.

PERSHING'S MEMOIRS NEARING COMPLETION

LINCOLN, Neb.—(UP)—Memoirs of General John J. Pershing, recalling the stirring days when he led the A. E. F. into action in France, are nearing completion. In Lincoln for his annual visit to his boyhood home, Pershing said that a winter of work virtually had completed his book.

REDEMPTION DAY BABCOCK'S TOPIC IN TENT SERVICE

Dr. C. H. Babcock spoke to a packed tent Sunday night in the evangelistic series sponsored by the Church of the Nazarene, opposite the Junior high school. About 95 accepted Christ, upon confession of faith, throughout the day.

Speaking on "The Day of Redemption," the evangelist said: "This is the day of God's condescending mercy. Emphatically it is man's day of redemption. The coming of God to the soul is like the sun, coming from its meridian splendor, dispelling all darkness."

"A grey-haired father's son committed a horrible crime, for which he must pay a life penalty in imprisonment. Seeing him stripped of his civilian clothing and the donning of the prison garb and the shaving of his head, the old gentleman broke into weeping and, picking up some of the locks, said: 'My God, is this all I have, after an investment of $10,000 in this son?' Christ looks upon an indifferent and trespassing world and says, 'Is this all I have after my blood sacrifice—in the supreme effort on Calvary, to rebuild a spiritual and social order?'"

"It is marvelous, how the understanding is quickened, when one becomes saved. The book of God becomes an open volume. The divine revelation brings greater illumination

CHILD ACTRESS HELP TO FAMILY

HOLLYWOOD, June 18.—(UP)—Six year-old Fay Chaldecott, child film star, has engineered movie jobs for all members of her family but pa.

First she brought brother Denis, 8, with three teeth missing in a trick smile. Producer Samuel Goldwyn saw Denis at the studio, liked his amble and hired him.

Next day Mrs. Sylvia Vaughan Chaldecott, the girl's mother brought her to the studio. Goldwyn watched the red-haired young lady tinker with little Fay's dress, and hired her, too.

The father, Howard Chaldecott, is now fixing himself up to escort Fay to the studio. He is the only professional actor in the family.
