Buck Jones in Rialto Western

As the former New Yorker who made his name in "Stone of Silver Creek" at the Rialto theater for today and Saturday.

"Let 'em Have It" Now At Craterian The thrilling method of the department of justice's relentless war on crime held the audience spellbound at the Craterian theater last night, where "Let 'em Have It" opened a three-day run.

Arden, as an attorney, disgusted with the ease with which lawbreakers beat cases in court, Stephens as a wealthy sportsman who gives up a big-game quest to hunt more dangerous human quarry; and Gordon Jones, a dead-shoot cowboy infuriated at the lawlessness of modern bad men, become the "Three Musketeers" of the federal sleuths.

Their first job is to nip a kidnapping plot. The mobsters get a life sentence, but a chauffeur receives only a light punishment. From then on the ex-chauffeur becomes, by quick steps, Public Enemy No. 1.

A reign of terror sweeps across the middle west—bank holdups, slaughter of innocent bystanders, all done with such lightning speed that local police are helpless.

With every clue pointing to the ex-chauffeur as the leader of the ruthless gang, the federal operatives keep on his trail as the chase continues. One of the most exciting incidents occurs when an agent is surprised and slain by the mob.

As the hunt grows hotter, the ex-chauffeur turns every trick of his trade to evade the law, all of which makes the final reels of the picture as exciting a piece of filmcraft as has ever been screened.
