DIRE DANGER FOR CHILDREN AT PLAY ON DREDGE POOLS

"Before we know it, some child is going to get drowned in that awful dredge-hole near the north city limits" was the ominous warning issued today by Chief of Police Clatus McCredie, in regard to the "habit of small boys of swimming in the pools made by the excavation of the big power shovel at the Medford Concrete Construction company's rock crusher on Bear creek.

"In the first place, the creek is sluggish and filthy at this time of year," said the chief. "No one can foresee what diseases may be contracted there." He explained that at the point where the youngsters swim, the huge shovel has scooped away the bottom, some places to a depth of only a few inches, but in others to 10 feet deep.

The sluggish waters of Bear creek are so muddy that it is impossible to see the bottom at any depth, and tiny boys, wading about, may fall into the holes at any time. Wading is not the most treacherous pastime, however. It is an accepted fact among the small fry along the creek that no swimming expedition is complete without a raft. Although Cass Wyomere, foreman at the cement company plant, spends most of his spare time knocking these rafts apart, the children build them faster than he can destroy them.

The danger of such rafts was pointed out by Chief McCredie, who stated that last week six small children, one of them a girl of three, were all on one tiny raft hardly capable of supporting one grown man—and not one of the six could swim.

"The wild memory of the tragedy which took the life of little Buster Medley at that spot last year should be deterrent enough to the children and to their parents, but apparently isn't. The only way whereby another fatal accident can be averted is for the parents to exert iron restraint, and forbid their children getting near Bear creek at all," McCredie said.

"The best way to stop the practice is to send the children to a pool where they will be properly supervised, or for the parents to accompany the children to one of the many nearby streams where the danger is nil, either from a sanitary point of view, or from the danger of drowning," the chief advised.

EAGLE POINTER PLANS RAISING OF FROGS FOR EASTERN CONSUMERS

EAGLE POINT, July 18.—(Spil.)—Shades of Owen Wister's "Virginian" and the remarkable frog-farms of Tulare! Floyd Pearce of here has just finished the first two units of a frog pond, which when completed, will contain an acre and a half of croaking and bellowing giants of the bull-frog variety.

The frogs are not to be of the jumping variety such as Mark Twain encountered in Calaveras county, but are the edible kind, the back legs of which, when peeled and put into a hot skillet will create remarkably by leaping out on the floor unless the skillet is covered. Muscular reaction, you know.

According to Pearce, the eastern markets will absorb all of the frogs he can supply, but they will have to wait for at least 18 months, until the two frogs he recently imported from New Orleans will have a chance to develop a few offspring. Like chain letters, frogs start out slowly, but by arithmetic progression soon start adding up alarmingly.

Perhaps that's where Mr. Pearce got his idea—"Send five copies of this to your friends, and include a frogskin to the person whose name appears at the bottom of this letter."
