YOUTH CONFESSES TWO SLAYINGS

Sheriff Elmer Gum (left) announced in Auburn, Calif., that Earl B. Kimball, alias Earl B. Cramer (right) confessed to slaying James C. Kennett of Chicago and an unidentified youth because he 'quarreled with them.' He threw the bodies down abandoned mine shafts, according to Gum. District Attorney Lowell Sparks is in center. skulls crushed in by ax blows, have been recovered from the water-filled shafts of two abandoned mines.

Tells of Graves.

Last night, in the presence of a group of newspaper reporters, he supplied specific directions which, he claimed, would lead to the burial grounds of J. J. (Radium) Johnson, another prospector, and Fred Realing or Grilling, a mine caretaker.

He told the newspaper men that when they had located the bodies of these two men to return to his cell and he would give them directions which would lead them to the burial spots of 23 other men he had killed in his two years in the mountains.

Starting as his story was and doubtfully as it was received by officers and reporters alike, Sheriff Elmer H. Gum, organizing the posse, pointed that Kimball already had provided the information which had solved two killings and that "anything is possible."

Admits Slaying.

The story of the other asserted killings poured from the talkative but calm prisoner after a newspaper reporter had asked him if he knew what had happened to Realing or Grilling, who disappeared last November. Stochically, Kimball replied he had killed the man last fall for giving his dog away.

This was followed by the assertion that he killed Johnson six weeks ago because the older prospector accused him of slaughtering a steer. He claimed he bodies of Johnson and Realing or Grilling were buried not far from the deserted mining camp, where Kennett and the youth were slain.

Of the others who, he said, died by his hand, he identified one as "Brown," another as "Eddie," a CCC worker in nearby Union valley, and Jefferson Binghamman, a rancher mysteriously slain in December, 1933.

Gruesome as the tale was, Kimball told it quickly to reporters. Officers were not present at the time. He checked back over details previously related with surprising accuracy and insisted with considerable stubbornness that the almost unbelievable tale of wholesale murder was true and would be proved if "directions are followed."

ROGERS TRIBUTE GREATEST GIVEN PRIVATE CITIZEN

Starting at 7 o'clock in the morning, some 60,000 folk filed past the body, lying in state in a grove of trees at Forest Lawn. An even greater number failed to gain entrance.

But there wasn't enough time. In the afternoon, while fewer than 300 invited guests went to the private services at the Wee Kirk of the Heather, 10,000 gathered at the Hollywood boulevard, and an unnumbered host assembled in the movie studios, and the Community Presbyterian church, in Beverly Hills.

Mountain of Flowers

At the chapel a mountain of flowers was massed, the wreaths, figures, bouquets, and funeral pieces coming from all over the country. The entire lawn, outside, stretching down the whole side of the hill, was blanketed with them.

More typical of Rogers were the songs sung in his memory. At the private services, John Bolea, film actor, sang the cowboy-philosopher's favorite, "Old Faithful"; at one studio, James Melton, radio star, sang "Home on the Range"; at another, Joe Morrison, actor singer, "The Last Roundup," and at still another, Mino Martini, celebrated opera singer, "Agonus Dei."

Bolea's voice, strong at first, wavered twice as he sang behind the screen of flowers at the chapel.

Pastor Affected

The Rev. J. Whilcomb Brougter, former pastor of Tremont Temple Baptist church, Boston, and Temple Baptist, Los Angeles, seemed deeply affected as he led the service at the Wee Kirk of the Heather, describing Rogers, as he had known him.

"He has been the one figure in the life of our nation who has drawn to himself the admiration and the love of all classes of people," Dr. Brougter said.

The clergyman then read Will Rogers' own introduction to a book, written by the cowboy-artist, Charley Russell. Russell, Dr. Brougter said, had died before it was finished, and Rogers wrote the introduction in the form of a personal letter to his friend in the next world.

"I guess God needed a good man in a hurry," Dr. Brougter read. Then his voice broke, and tears welled into his eyes.

His audience represented a wide cross-section of American life.

Old Friends Present

The government of the United States, the army and the navy, the business world, the film industry—all were there. Postmaster General Joe A. Farley, Admiral W. P. Tarrant and Brig.-Gen. H. H. Arnold sat beside Mary Pickford, Eddie Cantor and Clark Gable.

Rogers' old friend, William S. Hart, came and left alone. In another chair was Stephen Fetscht, the negro film comedian.

A quartet sang "O Gentle Presence," with its reassuring refrain, "Lo, I am With You Always." An organ sobbed, softly. The service was over.

At the same time, in the Hollywood bowl, another intimate friend of Rogers, the author, Rupert Hughes, was presiding over a public service.

At Beverly Hills, where Rogers was the first mayor, and in the movie studios, loving friends paid their heartfelt homage to his memory.

So passed Will Rogers.

BUDGET DRAFTERS ARE CONSIDERED

The county court has started its consideration of naming the budget committee for framing the 1936 budget. The budget committee under the law is expected to have the budget completed and ready for public hearing by the first week of November. In the past the committee has been named late in September, giving a month or six weeks for deliberation.

Two widely known residents of the county, E. C. Faber of Central Point and J. W. McCoy of Ashland, have been mentioned as probable appointees. McCoy is a banker and Faber a merchant. Both are long-time residents of the county. James E. Collins, a local realtor, has been suggested as a Medford representative on the budget board.

County Judge Earl B. Day said yesterday that the county court had given some thought to naming the budget committee and expected to make the selections next month. Each member of the county court, in the past has picked one budget committee member. The committee acts with the county court in the preparation of the budget.

The county court is expected to issue a call soon for county offices and departments to prepare their annual budgets. Some of the county offices already have them ready.

BAGLEY CANNERY TAKING TOMATOES

The Bagley Canning company at Ashland is busy putting up tomatoes this week, according to H. E. Koozer, manager of the plant, who says that the crop this year shows promise of being a fine one.

The Rogue River Valley Canning company in this city has not yet begun work on tomatoes, but expects to do so in the near future.

The Knight Packing company here opened yesterday for an initial run, was closed today, but planned on opening for good tomorrow. According to J. H. Zimmer, manager of the plant, the 1935 crop looks good, and with continued weather of the kind that has prevailed so far this year, he looks for a splendid yield. Any extremely hot weather now, however, will do untold damage to the tomatoes, he said.

The Knight plant will continue to run, putting up whole tomatoes, making puree, and catsup until the first heavy frost, or until the first heavy rain, Zimmer stated.

Hayes in Hospital—Robert Hayes, son of Dr. and Mrs. James C. Hayes, was a patient yesterday at the Sacred Heart hospital, having undergone a minor operation.
