

GRANGE DISPLAYS WILL BE FEATURE; PARADE AT 10 A.M.

will be a big barbecue, from 8 until 8 o'clock, and after appetites are sated, there will be a big dance, with music being furnished by the Harmony Honey, a group of feminine orchestra players from Medford. The dance is expected to be the largest held in the valley that evening, with hundreds ending a day's fine festivities with the dance set aside as the climax.

Notice from the fair board indicates that interest is growing by leaps and bounds, with many industrial exhibits and floats having been registered from this city. Started in a small way several years ago, the fair has progressed so rapidly each year that additional space was needed this year to house all the exhibits, and residents of that district, as well as hundreds from Medford, Ashland and Grants Pass, journey to the little town yearly.

Plan No Dull Moments.
Anxious to get away from any lull in the day's activities, as evidenced at so many similar programs, the fair board has arranged for little side events throughout the day to keep the interest aroused.

One of the most interesting features of the fair will be the mineral and curio exhibits. Although there will be no prizes awarded in this department, many articles of exceptional interest have been submitted. The display cases will be in the old Gold Hill hotel, for these specimens.

No stock will be on display, except that raised by 4-H members, but other offerings by school children will have a prominent place, with class and individual work taking the center of interest in that department.

HISTORY OF WOOD AS FUEL TOLD BY FLOYD HART IN INTERVIEW

The following interview concerning the history of wood as a fuel and its importance in the households of today was secured from Floyd Hart of the Timber Products company of this city.

"Wood as a fuel dates back to prehistoric man, when he first discovered that heat could be had by the burning of sticks in the open. After realizing the benefits derived from this source of heat man began devising means to conserve this heat that it might better serve his purpose.

"From the open fire there was the gradual transition to an enclosed fire, then flues were introduced to remove gases and smoke, and draft control to regulate burning. Today we have the modern stove and furnace with most modern draft control, with maximum radiating surface and every possible device to extract the maximum heat from the products of combustion before passing the residue to ash pit or chimney," Mr. Hart stated.

"During the past 25 years the largest power plants of this country have been spending large sums of money in perfecting the burning of fuel in the endeavor to obtain perfect or smokeless combustion. It is only quite recently that any attention has been given to home-heating plants, where a tremendous waste is going on in the partial burning of many types of fuel."

As a result of applied engineering effort, great improvements have been made in recent years in household and industrial sawdust burners. Wood in a finely divided state such as sawdust lends itself exceptionally well in attaining complete efficient combustion and when used in modern sawdust burners, the results in fuel saving, simplicity in operation, uniformity of heat and absolute heat control have been entirely satisfactory, according to Mr. Hart.

"Sawdust burners are not expensive and can be easily installed, without disturbing present furnace or boiler installations. Thousands of
