SOIL AID SEEN IN MESQUITE SODS

QUANAH, Tex.—(UP)—The Great Plains must be resodded before the dust storm menace can be controlled, in the opinion of Superintendent J. Roy Quinby of the Texas Agricultural Experiment station here.

Buffalo grass or "running mesquite," native to the plains country, Quinby says, is the ideal plant.

However, Quinby has devised a machine to harvest buffalo grass seed. He characterizes the machine as an "overgrown vacuum cleaner." The seed grows close to the ground and falls as soon as it matures.

In tests Quinby has harvested 80 pounds an acre, he says. One pound will plant an acre of ground effectively.

"Resodding the midwest with buffalo grass will lay the dust and keep the farms at home," Quinby declares.
