

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—Thoughts while strolling: Nicholas Murray Butler could walk on in any day as a capitalist without a makeup. Slick had propaganda in those travel books...

Mayor La Guardia's gadget-vested car. Cable from Hannen Ewaffer: O. O. McIntyre is a newspaper man in Locagally, Fifeshire, Scotland. No one packs so much excitement in his voice as Clem McCarthy describing a thrilling race.

Look alike: Singular Lewis and John Buchan, English author. For a different sort of evening: A round of Chinatown with Anna May Wong. Or a swing of the bars with Charles MacArthur and Gene Fowler.

Over-rated best seller: Ellen Glasgow's "Vein of Iron." Hendrik Van Loon's face would be grand for a pipe ad. "Stumpy" lady: Cobina Wright, Constant dinner companions: Joseph

P. Kennedy and Herbert Swope. Time for some fool to open one of those restaurants demanding full dress. I cannot pass that barn-like restaurant, "The Flying Trapeze," incidentally, without dawdling before the window for a few peaks. Last evening an intrepid aerialist was swinging in the Dainty Marie manner, over the diners, hanging by her chin, then her toes, and blowing kisses. It has become the midnight haunt of sports writers and was the favorite midnight snack place of Floyd Gibbons before he sailed for the wars.

Tearing up the street car tracks along Madison avenue has given an appearance of amazing width to that thoroughfare and also ballooned it as a shopping center. It is flicked with rue de la Paix stretches in dazzling decors of chromium and mirror. There are Chez This and Maison That, single-named boutiques such as Minerva, Jeanne and a pair of male milliners calling themselves Hilare and Hector. Madison avenue's perpetual touch of austerity is the ponderous and stuffily overbuilt White-Laid mansion with gloomy courtyard suggesting decaying grandeur. At night only a caretaker's light seems to burn and there are beliefs that makes one think of owls and bats. And hurry the step.

The famous old Reuben from mid-night-to-dawn stand on Madison avenue has been redecorated for another restaurant experiment, the original tenant having swirled around the corner in a fresh whoop of delicatessen splendor. The wheel chair alma seeker also has taken up his stand at the left of the entrance along with the grinning blackamoor and his "Reuben's—that's all!" Indeed about the only familiar missing at the new Reuben is George Jessel and his whackin black cheroot.

Tucked in a niche off West street's roaring waterfront is the illiterative appeal of "Biscuit Bill Bolivar's," a haven for seamen who crave a delicacy seldom available at sea. Writers of sea tales often drop in for local color. Conrad visited it. "Biscuit Bill" is reminiscent of the eponym B. L. T. exhumed from comparative oblivion: "Bunn the Baker of Baraboo." Bunn was a real figure in the life of Ringling brothers' famous home town in Wisconsin.

Artistic temperament note: Leon Gordon, the painter, looked out a bedroom window of his Connecticut home recently on one of those mornings when the world seemed dour. In his dolor he decided a nearby hill should be the vista. He grumbled and brooded all day. So much so next morning a fleet of steam shovels arrived. And the hill was chug, chug chugged to oblivion.

Not even Casper Milquetoast is more of a pushover for slogans than I. But those hospitals for pinched shoes that herald "Limp in, Leap Out" are warring my faith. Every time I pass one I hang around to see a limper or leaper. So far: Nary one, nary way!

Long crowd are so willing to share their inheritance.

The answer, as given by sound political authorities, is that the Long regime was crumbling from within at the time he died. Otherwise they would have been no need for him to pass such measures as the stringent election law. It was as strong as formerly, he could have won without such dangerous steps.

Furthermore, there was a real live possibility of a musket revolution against the Long government, and there still is, unless the worst features of it are abolished, and democracy restored.

All this means it makes little material difference how soon the Long organization quarrels itself apart. The quarrel is only a post-mortem symptom of what the patient has already died.

It is true they started arguing among themselves on the steps of the hospital within fifteen minutes after Long was shot. They had a fairly good fight started before his body was cold. Later it has been patched up, and they may keep it patched up for a while.

But the opposition draws few praises here for political acumen or efficiency. Some of its friends doubt its ability to do much more than make a few inroads at the coming January election.

The best guess is that the Long outfit will stay together for probably a year or longer in his name but not in his spirit.

One of Huey's closest associates came to him on his deathbed and said substantially this: "You have often told me that you have made arrangements to care for your family. But no one knows how I suggest you tell me now in case anything happens to you."

They did not answer, but turned to his doctor then or later and asked whether death was imminent. The physician was apparently unwilling to disclose Huey's real condition to the patient and replied in the negative.

They asked how long before he would be up. The physician guessed it would be two weeks in bed and probably two weeks more in the hospital.

"Then I can make a speech within a month," Huey observed somewhat mysteriously. He died without answering the question.

There is a popular suspicion that Long was wealthy, that he had money hidden away, probably in New York. His intimates doubt that he had very much. His idea of money was that of any poor hill-billy who suddenly finds limitless quantities of more money opened to him. He likes to spend on clothes and neckties, but he never carried any money in his pocket. When he needed some, he telephoned his good friend, a local business man, and said: "Send over five hundred." He never paid a check himself.

Once, during a campaign trip, he was handed a contribution of $1,000 in small bills. He tossed these into his straw hat and handed the hat to a henchman. The befuddled henchman wrapped the stack in a used brown paper, but carried them around the rest of the trip in the hat. When the time came to pay a small luncheon bill, he unwrapped the paper and paid out $1.25, but continued to use the hat as a cash register. That was Huey's casual appreciation of money. What he wanted was power. Money was only an incidental but powerful implement to that end.

The straw hat bookkeeping system is what has confused the government agents trying to break up the Long dictatorship by income tax indictments. Nevertheless, those on the inside here have been tipped that a half dozen more indictments have been ready for a week to be handed down by federal authorities. The highest in the Long camp are expected to be named in these charges. They have been delayed apparently to permit federal agents to see if they can get any additional information out of the current trail of the Long lieutenant, Abe Shushan.

The federals have been hinting for two years that they were going to indict Long, but never did. The inside reason is supposed to be that they dug up a $5,000 or $6,000 case against him and were afraid to prosecute because the amount was not sufficiently damaging. They are sponsoring a rumor now that they had a real case against Long in the latest batch of expected indictments.

Wimer Camp Has Religious Service

CAMP WIMER (Spl.)—Reverend H. F. Peterson, medford Presbyterian minister, with Misses Hodgkinson and De Vries, conducted religious services in the Wimer recreational hall Tuesday evening. Reverend Peterson spoke on the importance of habit in observing spiritual and mental laws. He called attention to the Grand Canyon as an example of how habit in a physical sense, God, the minister declared, does not punish a man for infraction of a spiritual law, but tries to keep him from breaking it. Punishment comes in the act itself as in the case where a man offends the law of gravity by stepping off a cliff. Members sang group songs with Miss Hodgkinson at the piano and Miss De Vries sang a solo.

Baldock Visits Siskiyou Road

ASHLAND, Oct. 11.—(Spl.)—R. H. Baldock, state highway commission engineer, and other officials of the engineering department, were in Ashland Thursday on a trip of inspection of the Siskiyou highway projects, for which two additional contracts were let Wednesday. Mr. Baldock stated that the contract for the Wall Creek underpass project would be let as soon as an agreement is reached with the Southern Pacific railroad company, which he stated would probably be about December 1.

NIMBLE CHEER LEADER IS FORMER CIRCUS BOY

EMPORIA, Kan., Oct. 11.—(UP)—The Teachers college here may now not win a football championship, but its cheerleader is undoubtedly tops. He is Frank Wistard—tight rope walker, acrobat, tumbler, clown, tap dancer and singer—former circus boy.

Dog Mothers Fawn HAYTI, Mo. (UP)—A six-week-old buck fawn has been adopted by a large female German police dog. Each morning the young deer and the dog romp and the dog watches over the deer.
