

WILD ETHIOPIANS SHOUT DEFIANCE ON WAY TO FRONT

Will Not Return Until Last Italian Driven From Land Is Promise — "Give Us Guns" Is Plea To Haile.

By James A. Mills (Associated Press Foreign Staff)

ADDIS ABABA, Oct. 18. — (AP)—Ethiopia's manhood today gave thunderous answer to the peace suggestions of European statesmen who hope to satisfy Mussolini's ambitions by offering him parts of this proud empire.

Their answer echoed the declaration of Emperor Haile Selassie who, in his address to his legions in a review before they leave for the front, said: "Comrades, I shall be with you on the battlefield to shed my blood with yours in defense of our common fatherland. We shall accept no such peace terms as those France proposes. I shall die with you if necessary, rather than submit to such humiliation."

Thousands on March Tens of thousands of soldiers are pouring into the capital, in ceaseless night and day marching. Begrimed from a fortnight's march, they rushed to the military field beside the Imperial palace today to assure their emperor of their determination never to return home until the last Italian invader has been driven from their fatherland.

Over the shoulders of the warrior chiefs are lionskin capes and above their fuzzy black hair bristle away crowns of lion's manes. They arrived on mules heavy with gold spangles and caparisoned in scarlet. In the great imperial tent the emperor, dressed in the uniform of a field marshal, sat on a high throne, surrounded by his military staff. They too wore military garb, rather than the traditional capes.

The Emperor gave the whole scene the grim aspect of war. That is his answer, say Ethiopians, to those who seek peace by robbing him of his lands.

Shout Threats Fiery chiefs rushed forward to the throne to swear allegiance. Following were their frantic warriors, brandishing swords menacingly, shaking their shields and waving glistering three-pronged spears.

They shouted and gesticulated, declaring they will slaughter the Italians.

Ferocious, bearded seigneurs, resembling the late Emperor Menelik, leaped from their mules and rushed to the throne of the king, whose usually stolid countenance was drawn with emotion.

In spite of his self-restraint tears glistened in his eye. With a handkerchief he tried to conceal every display of feeling unworthy of the line of Judah and commander of fearless savages.

Bedlam broke out as the ranguard of provincial warriors reached the Imperial tent. The wild men spun back and forth in ecstasy, gnashing their teeth and aiming their guns at imaginary foes. They shouted hatred for the enemy.

Suddenly they hurled their weapons at the King's feet and prostrating themselves, declared:

Are Unafraid "We will drown the baby-killers in their own blood. We are going to our death and we are unafraid, Adieu."

They rose and, striking swords on shields, shrieked: "We will exterminate the white cigarette-smokers. We will push Ethiopia's boundaries from sea to sea. We will fight with clubs if necessary, but, O Emperor, thou Lion of Judah, give us guns."

"Yes, give us guns," bellowed a ferocious, half-naked, bushy-haired jungle giant, hurling a broken musket at Selassie's feet.

"I have a boy," cried another, stretching his arms toward the sovereign: "If I am killed, call him to the army."

The Emperor, looking at his own son, Duke Makonnen, beside him, wept. The Abuna (Coptic Pope) also burst into tears. Only the war ministers sat grim and stolid.

Filling past the throne other feudatories, uttering their wildest threats and vows and chanting age-old African war songs, beseeched the Emperor to send them to the front.

"Let us fight!" "Let us fight!" They rushed past guards into the tent, wielding spears, swords and knives so menacingly, American spectators feared the warriors, in their uncontrolled frenzy, might attack even the Emperor.

"Let us fight!" they screamed. "Let us kill our enemy! Let us avenge our women and children who were killed by the cowardly Italian aviators."

Until now, the warriors declared, the Emperor has been waiting in the hope the League of Nations would achieve a peaceful settlement. Now they insist on taking matters into their own hands. The Emperor himself cannot halt them.

Led by the war minister, Ras Muligeta, they leave immediately for the front to make good their vows of giving their last full measure of devotion to the empire.

PEARS ARE SENT TO CANAL CHIEFS IN MARKET DRIVE

Sixteen boxes of select, comice pears were on their way today to officials of the Panama Canal zone, the gift of Gordon R. Green, general manager of American Fruit Growers, Inc. With them went instructions telling how best to ripen the fruit.

The pears were sent to Arthur Goulet, general manager of the commissioning division, Roy Watson, chief quartermaster, and J. H. K. Humphrey, assistant quartermaster.

Mr. Green conferred with the Canal Zone officials when he was in Panama last spring making efforts to expand the markets for Rogue valley fruit. As a result of his conference the Canal Zone commissionaries are now handling a large quantity of Blue-goose D'Anjou, Mr. Green said, and he is now trying to increase sales of the comice.

Seeks European Outlet While in the tropics Mr. Green also visited in other Central American and South American cities for the purpose of creating new outlets for Rogue valley fruit. He is planning now to visit Europe for the same purpose next year.

Today Mr. Green was in receipt of a postal from O. O. McIntyre expressing appreciation for the box of Blue-goose comice pears Mr. Green sent him recently when he complained in his column that pears could not be obtained in New York restaurants.

"They were the best pears I have ever seen or eaten," Mr. McIntyre wrote.

Baked Fish Takes Ou Luxury Note At No Added Expense

Baked Fish Takes on the Luxury Note at No Added Expense.

If you associate fish with expensive accessories, it's high time to shelve the idea and get down to some real enjoyment of sea food, for there's a way to bake fish fillets that simply melt in your mouth, with all the rich flavor that would do credit to a chef.

If you would cover yourself with culinary glory and build a reputation your friends will envy, try this idea for Troco Baked Fish:

- 4 medium size fillets 1/2 cup Troco 1 egg Bread crumbs Salt and pepper.

Wash fish in cold water. Break whole egg and beat slightly with fork. Place bread crumbs on another plate. Dip fish in egg so that it is all covered with egg, then quickly lift it over to the bread crumbs and press the bread crumbs all over it. In large baking pan place the Troco and put pan in hot oven of 400 degrees to brown, but do not burn. Lower fish into hot Troco, then lift it and drop other side in Troco. Sprinkle each piece with salt and pepper and place fish in oven for 15 or 20 minutes, depending on size. Baste every three or four minutes. Remove from oven and baste until all liquid disappears into fish. Serve with baked tomatoes.

You will find Troco can solve many such problems for you in baking or frying meats, fish or vegetables, lending that richness of flavor that has always seemed so expensive. Troco can be used lavishly as a spread for bread, as a delicious shortening for cakes, or as a frying and seasoning agent in all manner of delightful dishes. It will give you that luxury touch that so many housewives have felt they must sigh over and give up. You can use Troco, feeling that you are getting all the richness and flavor you desire in your cooking.
