PROF. BANNISH TEACHING YUKON STATION SCHOOL

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, (Sp.)—Somewhere between here and Pilot Station on the Yukon, far up in Alaska, a large package of correspondence course lessons is speeding to J. P. Bannish, school teacher in that out-of-way place...

The school settlement is located some 200 miles south of Nome, and its only connection with civilization is an occasional boat in summer, and very, very occasionally—about once in six weeks—a dog team in winter. The student, Mr. Bannish, is hard at work for advanced degrees in education, and he wants to put in the long winter evenings in study. His reason for the late application is that he has just been transferred to Pilot station, following the destruction of the school at Hamilton by fire, where he formerly taught.

With his request for lessons in education courses, Mr. Bannish also offered to write some real "bear stories" for the university paper that will be wholly unrelated to football or other sports. "Bears often come right into our school yard," he wrote. "They are not pets, either, and I could write some real thrillers about escapes, and some encounters that were not escapes, that hunters have had with these animals up here."

For four years J. P. Bannish was an instructor in Jackson county schools, being principal of the Howland school from September, 1929, to May of 1931, and instructor at the Oak Grove school from September, 1932, until May of 1934, after which he left for Alaska. His wife and children now reside at 117 Tripp street in Medford.

Chief reason for the enthusiasm of Janna and the others is the fact that homecoming will once again have the "big game" of the season, that with Oregon State college, as the main attraction. With this certain to bring back a near-record of alumni, all the other features such as the homecoming dance, rally and other events are certain to set a new high for success, those in charge believe.

Once again all fraternity and sorority houses will be gaily decorated with illuminated signs. Many other features are also planned for the week end. WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—(AP)—Proclaiming November 11 as Armistice day, President Roosevelt remarked today that "it is particularly fitting on this anniversary of the armistice that we should express our determined desire to remain at peace with all nations and our conviction that permanent peace can and must be attained throughout the world."

The president directed that the flag be displayed on all government buildings that day, and invited the people to "observe the day with appropriate ceremonies in schools, in churches, or other suitable places." Ray Murphy, national commander of the American Legion, said after a call upon the president last week that he would express our determined desire to remain at peace with all nations and our conviction that permanent peace can and must be attained throughout the world.
