

PARK ENTRANCES SOUTH AND WEST TO BE KEPT OPEN

Winter Travel Promised Except During Height of Severe Storms—Chains, Careful Driving Necessary

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK. (Sp.)—The south and west entrance roads to Crater Lake will be open to travel throughout the winter of 1935-36, insofar as weather conditions permit, park officials announced today. Snowplows will keep the south and west roads free of snow the entire winter, but they will be closed during the height of severe storms.

Stormy weather during the current week and as a result road conditions are beginning to be somewhat uncertain. Storms at this time of the year can easily leave from one to two feet of snow in their wake. Motorists are advised to provide themselves with complete information on weather and road conditions before driving to the park, by contacting the National Park Service office in Medford.

Phones Available. During the main winter season, motorists are urged to make use of telephones along the south entrance highway, one located at the old entrance and the other at the new. A telephone is also located at the west entrance ranger cabin, connected with park headquarters.

It is highly essential for motorists to bear in mind that chains will be necessary equipment when highways are snow-covered. While snowplows will keep deep snow off the pavement, icy and slippery conditions can not be entirely eliminated, necessitating cautious driving. No accommodations of any kind are now or will be available in the park until next June, but can be procured at Fort Klamath, 20 miles away on the south road, or at Union Creek or Prospect, 20 and 30 miles respectively distant on the west entrance road.

Take Plenty of Gas. In making the trip to the lake during the winter, motorists must have an adequate gasoline supply, as the nearest available gasoline is outside of the park. Warm clothes and suitable footwear are necessary when the snow is deep.

Providing additional information, Crater Lake National Park officials are now perfecting a radio communication system over which weather and road condition facts will be made available to the public. Persons having short wave sets will be able to pick up Crater Lake station K2LH, on the 3235 kilocycle band. Preliminary tests reveal that the system will operate satisfactorily this winter.

The rim road is now closed for the winter season, as well as the north entrance to the Dalles-California highway, by snowdrifts. While the east entrance is still open to travel, it is uncertain how long it will remain open.

The Annie Spring checking station will be in operation the entire season. The regular one-dollar entrance fee will be maintained.

POSTHUMOUS HONOR GIVEN WILL ROGERS

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 30.—(AP)—

In a private ceremony, the "Spirit of St. Louis" medalion awarded by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers today was given to Mrs. Will Rogers in tribute to her late husband, the humorist-actor.

The medalion was voted posthumously to the noted comedian at a Columbus day banquet in St. Louis, the society honoring him as one who had contributed most of the development of public confidence in aviation.

He was committed to the institution following a sanity hearing. He admitted at the hearing that he sprinkled poison on butter in the Williams home, but was unable to give any reason for desiring the death of his neighbors.

They noted a bitter taste to the butter and ate but little of it.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Oct. 30.—(UP)—Charles Roth, a bookkeeper, whose salary averaged $30-$40 weekly for 28 years, died recently. Today, in supreme court, it was revealed he had deposited $122,316.92 in 17 banks.

His widow said he had lived "a very frugal existence." Reinhardt Brothers, Inc., his employers, said he had "unlawfully and fraudulently misappropriated" the money in filling out to recover it.

TOBE SKIEMS NABBED ON SLAYING CHARGE

BURNS, Ore., Oct. 30.—(AP)—Tobe Skiem, sought for 10 weeks in the eastern Oregon range country for questioning in connection with the slaying of Ed McDonald, Burns stock buyer, was held in the Harney county jail today. He was captured last night at a ranch house on the Cwyhee river in Malheur county.

Skiem, taciturn figure of the long-horn range country, was surprised as he rode a horse into the yard of the Hinehart ranch.

STATE PROPERTY WORTH TWENTY-ONE MILLIONS

SALEM, Oct. 30.—(AP)—The state of Oregon owns buildings, furnishings and equipment valued in excess of $21,000,000.

This was brought out at a senate committee meeting here to determine whether it would be economy for the state to carry insurance rather than relying on a restoration fund.

LIQUOR CONTROL TURNS HARD EYE ON BEER PLACES

Closest Scrutiny Planned Before Issuance of Next Year's Licenses—Weeding Out Process Begun

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 30.—(AP)—The Oregon liquor control commission served notice today that each and every beer and wine outlet in the state will be subjected to the closest scrutiny before next year's licenses are issued.

The task of checking each of the 6000 licenses now on file will require about nine weeks' time.

The liquor commission's action of today indicated beer and wine consumption in Oregon is nearing the saturation point. The board revoked the licenses of seven establishments, suspended two others, and denied every one of the eight new applications presented.

Nearly all the refusals of licenses were grounded on the complaints of residents near the proposed outlets, and on the opinion of the commission's investigators that certain cities already are well supplied with beer parlors.

Indicative of the scrutiny with which current licenses will be examined, was the instruction given today to Eugene Keity, assistant administrator. He was asked to have his operatives check the past record of each beer retailing establishment, its previous suspensions or warnings, evidences of illegal gambling devices, proximity to churches, parks or schools, and sanitary conditions in the establishments.

The seven revocations included three in Portland, three in Lakeview and one in Klamath Falls.

Services to Drunks Costly. The three Lakeview cases involved licenses held by John Westlin, Art Gaylan and Phoebe Metzger. In each case the accusation was that beer had been served intoxicated persons, and in each case the revocations were made on the recommendation of the police chief and sheriff at Lakeview.

William Sandell of Klamath Falls had his license revoked on the allegation he had served beer to intoxicated persons.

A 10-day suspension was handed to D. A. Shannon and Iris Rice, operators of the Old Dutch Mill at Roseburg, holders of a package store license, for reputedly having served without food.

Low Prices Bring Protest. Members of the liquor administration board received considerable pleasure from a letter from the National Retail Liquor Package Stores association of New York, which asked the Oregon board either to stop advertising its prices or to raise prices to conform to the level of neighboring states.

The association complained that the state-controlled stores are underselling the licensed private dispensers of California, and the state-operated stores of Washington and Idaho, and that Oregon is thus "demoralizing" the liquor market.

The Oregon board decided to ignore the plea.

Issuance of duplicates to those who lose original liquor permits will be stopped when the 1936 permits will be distributed. The new permits will cost 50 cents, and the same charge will be made for a duplicate. Considerable saving in printing costs and clerical work is expected.

Keating, camping in the woods, discovered a deer standing with his tail within reach from the tent door. He grabbed the tail and held on, but not for long. The animal kicked Keating over backwards and disappeared. Keating has part of the tail to prove it.

MINER'S FORTUNE FRITTERED AWAY; HE DIES A PAUPER

John Swanson Who Made Fabulous Wealth in Klondike Leaves Packet Clippings Telling Past Glory

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 30.—(AP)—John Swanson, 63, known wherever gold was panned in the northwest, and who made a fabulous fortune in the Klondike, died here today in poverty. "Old Inchof," as Swanson was known in Alaska's roaring nineties, once hit a rich mother lode that netted him $15,000 a day in gold. Like hundreds of other sordidly who participated in the feverish quest for fortune in the alient north, Swanson poured thousands upon thousands over the gaming tables of Dawson, Fairbanks and Nome.

Today he was found dead in the lodging where the county paid his rent.

Clippings Tell Story. Near his bed was a canvas packet of yellowed newspaper clippings that disclosed the odyssey of his life: fished for gold, dog-eared, frayed at the edges from constant thumbing, the clippings recalled the glories of the "Little Minook," a famous mine that brought its owner every luxury known in Nome.

They disclosed that the Swede miner could have written and cashed a check running high in six figures; that he was a friend of Tex Rickard, proprietor of the famous Great Northern saloon, and a friend of "Klondike Kate" Rockwell, who danced on the tables when she was "a light-footed girl, working for Alexander Partridge," now a theatrical magnate.

Knave Beach, London. The clippings told of Swanson's comradeship with Rex Beseh and the late Jack London, when these colorful characters trod the golden Skagway trail.

Swanson came to southern California. He portrayed the role of the "Old Swede" for M-G-M in the picture "The Trail of '98." His funds were pretty low by that time. His sun was sinking, but he still panned for gold. He worked the San Gabriel river bed near Los Angeles, picking up small sums for a whole day of panning.

Today he was dead, leaving not even enough for his funeral.
