

RENAME STREETS TO MAKE HISTORY FOR NAZI HEROES

All Evidence of Marxist Regime Erased But Some Tributes to Monarchists Are Retained by Hitler

BERLIN—(UP)—Since their accession to power the national socialists have systematically been changing the names of German city streets to commemorate Nazi heroes, with the intention of creating new history.

Anything recalling the Marxist regime, has been ruthlessly wiped out. Monarchist names have fared better, despite the Nazis' deep enmity for the former nationalists and remaining monarchists.

Ask anybody in Berlin for Adolf Hitler Place and the inquirer can be sure to receive the right directions, for one of the most beautiful squares in the city ranking after the well-known Lustgarten, in front of the former royal palace, is the Adolf Hitler Square, in the west of the city.

One of the most prominent streets is the Hermann Goering, along the big Tiergarten park, starting at the famous old Brandenburger gate through which, in the summer of 1871, Emperor Wilhelm I, accompanied by Chancellor Bismarck and Field Marshal Moltke, entered the capital with his victorious troops from France.

Street Often Renamed.

Hermann Goering street first was called Koenigsplatz in memory of the battle of Koenigsplatz in 1806, where Prussia defeated Austria. After that the name was changed to Budapest street in honor of Hungary. Then, when the first president of the German republic died, a part of the street was named Friedrich Ebert street; the remaining part became Stresemann street after the death of the well known German foreign minister.

Just before the Nazis ascended to power many squares and streets had adopted Republican and Marxist names of their leaders, like Ebert, Rathenau, Karl Marx, Stresemann. Now all such memories have been wiped out. Only the old royal and imperial names still remain unchanged. Friedrich (in honor of Frederic, the Great), Koenigin Luise, Kaiser Wilhelm, Kaiserin Augusta and many other royal names still are found in every town, large or small, all over Germany.

Lieutenants Honored.

A short time ago the new Rhine-bridge, connecting the two commercial and industrial towns Mannheim and Ludwigshafen, was named "Schlageter Bridge." In memory of Lieut. Albert Leo Schlageter, hero of the Polish rebels in Upper Silesia. Schlageter later was shot by the French army of occupation in Muhl for sabotage.

Berlin has a Maikowsky street in honor of a storm troop leader who was shot by communists while returning from the torchlight parade in honor of Hitler the night he assumed power in Berlin's Wilhelmstrasse. There is also a Herbert Nothke street, so named in honor of a Hitler youth killed by communists. But the Nazis also do not forget the names of leaders and aids of Hitler still alive, as well as leaders during war, generals and admirals who are dead. So Speyer, hometown of the minister of propaganda, in the Palatinate where Luther spoke and old German emperors were crowned, now has a Joseph Goebbels street. Munich has an Adolf Wagner street, also a Hitler von Epp street. Both of these men hold high Bavarian government positions as premier and state counselor; they were co-fighters with Hitler, especially during the Munich "beer cellar putsch" in 1923, after which the leader was incarcerated in the Landsberg fortress.

Von Spee on Roll.

There is also a Graf von Spee street in memory of the commander of the German East Asia fleet during the war, who sailed from China with the 12,000-ton armored cruiser Scharnhorst and Gneisenau around South America and defeated and sunk British warships at the battle

George Hall Claims Conviction Obtained in Community Dominated by Mob—Unable Secure Fair Trial

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—(AP)—George Hall, alias Manning, under sentence in California to hang for the murder of two officers, appealed to the supreme court today to halt his execution.

Lawyers for Hall claim he was denied a fair trial by California courts and convicted in a community "dominated by the mob."

George Hall, alias Manning, who asked the United States supreme court today to halt his execution for murder, was convicted of the slaying of two men who attempted to block his speeding car and question him about the kidnaping of a Bellingham, Wash., customs guard.

E. C. Ballinger, the guard, was slugged and kidnaped at his border station after he had questioned two occupants of an automobile about rifles they carried.

Ballinger, tied hand and foot, was shoved into the luggage compartment of the coupe. Eight hours later he was dragged from the machine, beaten and left hand-cuffed to a tree between Medford and Hornbrook, Cal.

An alarm was spread and Steve Kent, California traffic officer, and Lester Quigley, Yreka garage mechanic, sped northward to intercept the kidnap car. They forced it to halt. As Officer Kent approached the machine a bullet was fired through his heart. Other bullets struck Quigley in the face and chest, killing him.

A short time later, evidence disclosed, the Yreka sheriff and a deputy cornered Hall and a companion, Paul Newcomb, who declared he was a hitch-hiker picked up by Hall several hours before.

of Colonel, off Chile. Later, while cooling at the Falkland Isles, Spee was surprised and wiped out by a powerful British battlefleet. There also are streets named in honor of the famous German admirals Tirpitz and Schone.

Adolf Hitler streets, squares, places, roads, bridges and houses are almost numberless over the country. The next most popular name is Hindenburg, and as a good third comes Horst Wessel, young ST-man, who was killed in February, 1930, by communists in Berlin. Horst Wessel, a pastor's son, composed the famous Horst Wessel song which is the Nazi hymn.

Arguments were heard Wednesday by the supreme court at Salem in the appeal of George A. High, and Robert N. Each is under four years' sentence in state prison. George High is at liberty on bonds, and Robert N. High, his brother, is detained in the county jail awaiting the final outcome.
